neither the petition in bail trover⁶⁴ nor an amendment thereto⁶⁵ is required to be verified. Where plaintiff brings an action in trover on defendant's acts of trespass and conversion, plaintiff need not allege whether or not defendant's trespass was willful.⁶⁶ If plaintiff does allege that the trespass through which the conversion came about was willful, his case does not fail if it develops that the trespass was innocent or inadvertent.⁶⁷ A petition which shows that the court has no jurisdiction of the action,⁶⁸ and which, even after amendment, contradicts the attached bail affidavit which shows the same lack of jurisdiction,⁶⁹ is demurrable.

b. Title and Right to Possession

The petition must properly allege the plaintiff's title and right to possession.

A petition which shows the title to the property sued for in another person,⁷⁰ and fails to show that plaintiff had any title⁷¹ or right of possession,⁷² or that defendant is not entitled to possession,⁷³ is fatally defective. An allegation that plaintiff "claims title" is, however, sufficient;⁷⁴ and an allegation that plaintiff⁷⁵ or a named third person⁷⁶ delivered the property to defendant, being merely an aid in description, does not tend to deny plaintiff's title.

c. Description and Value of Property

The petition must describe the property with such particularity as will enable the court to seize and hold it, the particularity required being dependent on the nature of the property and the circumstances of the case. Proper allegations of value are required.

In an action of bail trover, the petition must describe the goods with such particularity as will enable the court to seize the chattels for which the action is brought, and hold them for restitution in the event of final recovery by plaintiff,⁷⁷ and plaintiff is not relieved of the necessity of so describing the property by the fact that he has a right at the trial to elect to take a verdict for damages in lieu of the property sued for.⁷⁸ No exact rule can be

Effect of description

Description of deed in statutory form prescribed for actions for recovery of personality did not make gist of action one for realty or respecting title to land but description merely assisted in identifying paper or deed sought to be recovered.—Breen v. Barfield, 56 S.E.2d 791, 80 Ga.App. 615.

prescribed as a measure of description,⁷⁹ the particularity of description necessarily varying in degree according to the nature of the articles to be described and the circumstances which may tend to render this identification perfect,⁸⁰ and very meager terms of identity may be sufficient.⁸¹

This identification may be accomplished by a particular description or by a general description coupled with such additional allegations as to the time and place or manner of the taking or conversion as plainly to isolate the property from the general class to which it belongs;⁸² but if the description is altogether general and there is nothing in the description by which the property can be separated from the general mass of similar articles, the law is not met.⁸³ As a general rule, it may be said that the property involved is sufficiently described if from the description the property can be separated from that general mass of similar property by extrinsic evidence limited in its range by the description in the petition.⁸⁴ Where the purpose of the action is to recover damages for a conversion rather than the specific chattels themselves, it has been said that the same particularity of description is not essential as is requisite in detinue.⁸⁵ It is not essential to the sufficiency of the description that the description of the property as contained in the bill of sale be alleged.⁸⁶

Value. Where various articles of different kinds are sued for, the value of each should be alleged,⁸⁷ or at least the aggregate value of all.⁸⁸ Where the petition describes specifically each article of property sought to be recovered, a statement of the aggregate value of all the articles is sufficient, without a statement of the value of each article.⁸⁹ In the absence of a special demurrer, a petition in trover will not be dismissed for failure to allege the value of the article alleged to have been converted.⁹⁰

d. Demand and Refusal

Unless a conversion is otherwise alleged, an allegation of demand and refusal is necessary.

Where the petition in an action of trover does not otherwise allege an actual or constructive conversion, an allegation of demand and refusal is necessary;⁹¹ but where the petition alleges that defendant is in possession of the property sued for, and it does not appear that he lawfully acquired the possession, it is not necessary to allege that plaintiff before the suit was brought demanded possession of defendant, and that he refused to comply.⁹² So, where defendant is in possession at the time suit is entered and does not disclaim title to the property, the petition need not allege a demand before suit brought.⁹³ A petition alleging that defendant refuses to deliver the described property to plaintiff has been held sufficient although it fails to allege a demand.⁹⁴ Failure to allege a demand is an amendable defect which may be cured by the verdict and judgment.⁹⁵

e. Damages

The petition should contain proper allegations as to the damages sought and the amount thereof.

Plaintiff cannot recover an amount of damages larger than the amount he has claimed in his pleading,⁹⁶ although the evidence shows that a larger amount is due.⁹⁷ Where there is no specific ad damnum clause in the petition in an action of trover, and the only prayer is for process, the amount of damages asked for will be construed to be the alleged value of the property sued for.⁹⁸ If exemplary damages are sought, it is proper to allege facts authorizing the recovery of such damages.⁹⁹

How defective allegations availed of. Although a complaint may be defective in respect of its allegations as to damages, the defect cannot be reached by a general demurrer unless the pleading against which it is directed as a whole is fatally defective.¹

§ 225. — Answer

The answer of the defendant should allege all facts necessary to his defense.

In his answer, defendant cannot both admit and deny the cause of action on which plaintiff relies to recover.² When plaintiff's petition is not verified, although an affidavit for bail process is filed, it is not necessary that defendant's answer be verified.³ An amended answer in trover, alleging merely that defendant is ready and willing to surrender the property, and thereby tenders it to plaintiff, sets forth no defense, but, in view of other allegations that no demand was ever made on him for such property and that he has never refused to surrender it, and has not converted it, is defective only as omitting to disclaim title.⁴ Defendant's answer may cure defects in plaintiff's petition.⁵

Consent rule prescribed by statute in actions of ejectment has no application to proceedings in bail trover.⁶

§ 226. — Amendment

Pleadings in bail trover may be amended at any stage of the proceeding.

The pleadings in an action of trover may be amended at any stage thereof.⁷ An amendment to the petition may be allowed to correct the names or descriptions of parties plaintiff⁸ or defendant,⁹ to describe the property more specifically,¹⁰ to allege title or right of possession in plaintiff,¹¹ to allege the separate value of each article sued for where the original petition alleges merely the aggregate value,¹² or to reduce the amount alleged as the value of the property.¹³ An amendment to the petition more clearly specifying the article sought will not be denied on the ground that the surety's liability will be affected where judgment in excess of the penal sum of the bond is not being sought and the principals of the surety are vigorously defending the suit.¹⁴ A mere clerical error in describing the property may be cured by amendment if it is apparent from the two descriptions, that is, the description as shown by the original petition and the description as shown by the amendment, that the pleader had in mind the same property.¹⁵ Amendments which are wholly unnecessary,¹⁶ or which are insufficient to remedy the defect sought to be corrected,¹⁷ should not be allowed. Where the action is brought by one having no interest in the property, he will not be permitted to amend so as to proceed in his name for the use of the owner of the property.¹⁸

The answer may be amended where defendant admits possession and claims title in himself to show the interest actually claimed,¹⁹ and defendant's tender, after the first term, of the property sued for to limit plaintiff's recovery to such property may be made by amendment²⁰ if made prior to an elec-

Amendment as matter of right

On demurrer to petition in trover action, plaintiff could amend petition as a matter of right by striking out the name of plaintiff which had been signed thereto by an agent and by substituting the signature of plaintiff's attorney.—Lanier v. Lanier, 63 S.E.2d 131, 79 Ga.App. 131.

Amendment held proper

In trover, where defendant had filed plea of tender after first term, amendment to petition striking allegations that proceeds of plaintiffs' temporary bonds were converted into stock, and alleging conversion of temporary into permanent bonds which defendant refused to turn over, and had converted to its own use, and alleging that defendant was indebted to plaintiffs in sum representing value thereof, was not demurrable as stating new cause of action, nor because filed after plea of tender.—Hanner v. An amendment of a plea or answer to set up tender of property and disclaimer of title has been held demurrable where filed after the first term.²⁴ An amendment to the answer which shows no cause of action against plaintiff or any defense to his demand is properly stricken.²⁵

Service. Amendments to the petition need not be served on defendant.²⁶

§ 227. — Issues, Proof, and Variance

- a. In general
- b. Conformity of pleadings and proof
- c. Variance

a. In General

In an action of bail trover the sole issue presented is one of title.

The sole issue in the trial of an action of bail trover is that of title to the property in dispute²⁷ and not of debt,²⁸ and the fact that plaintiff may elect to take a money verdict in lieu of the specific personality claimed can in no event alter that issue.²⁹ A general denial of the allegations of the petition presents an issue as to the amount of plaintiff's damages,³⁰ and evidence tending to prove the amount of the damages is admissible thereunder.³¹ It is unnecessary to prove conversion in an action in trover, where defendant is in possession of the property³² and in his answer denies the averments of plaintiff's title;³³ nor is it necessary that the possession be defendant's own, but it is sufficient if he holds it as agent of another.³⁴ This rule does not apply, however, where defendant's possession was lawfully acquired.³⁵ It is unnecessary to show possession by defendant at the time plaintiff filed suit if defendant had converted the property prior thereto.³⁶ Where plaintiff claims title, alleges possession as being in defendant, and defendant thereafter denies such possession, proof of defendant's possession is required.³⁷

Demand and refusal. Evidence of a demand and refusal is necessary only as evidence of conversion,³⁸ and need not be proved where the conversion is otherwise shown,³⁹ or the necessity of proving a conversion is dispensed with,⁴⁰ as where defendant in his answer admits possession in himself and denies plaintiff's averments of title.⁴¹

Value. Although if plaintiff elects to take a money verdict proof of the value of the property is necessary, where a suit is brought for property and not for its value, but the value is alleged in the declaration, it need not be proved.⁴²

b. Conformity of Pleadings and Proof

As in other civil actions, there must be conformity between the pleadings and the evidence sought to be introduced.

In accordance with the rules pertaining to civil actions generally, evidence not within the issues joined in an action of trover is not admissible.⁴³ Thus, where the pleading does not raise the question, evidence that a bill of sale relied on to show title in plaintiff is without consideration is properly excluded;⁴⁴ and, if defendant has failed to file an issuable defense, he cannot contest plaintiff's title or right of possession⁴⁵ and is restricted in his cross-examination of witnesses to an inquiry as to the value of the property.⁴⁶ Defendant has the right to attack an instrument by which plaintiff seeks to prove title, and show that it is void, without filing a plea to that effect.⁴⁷

Proof that title is in defendant is admissible under a plea denying title in plaintiff;⁴⁸ and where defendant denies ownership in plaintiffs, and alleges a sale by him to plaintiffs on conditions never fulfilled, and it appears that plaintiffs had received possession, and defendant had wrongfully retaken possession, it is proper to permit plaintiffs to show the tender of the cash payments and notes, and their right to the property, without any formal pleading of a tender.⁴⁹ Although no claim for hire is made in the petition, evidence of the value of the property therefor is admissible when, in defense to an action for the recovery of goods sold by plaintiff to defendant under a contract reserving title until payment of the purchase price, the latter set up payment of a part of such price and claimed that the former was not entitled to recover the property without returning the amount paid.⁵⁰

An immaterial variance between the pleading and proof in an action of bail trover is harmless.

In accordance with the rules applicable in civil actions generally, an immaterial variance between the pleadings and proof in an action of bail trover is harmless, so that, although plaintiff in his petition alleges that the property sued for is in defendant's possession, a verdict for plaintiff will not be set aside on the ground that plaintiff has failed to prove possession in him;⁵¹ but plaintiff cannot recover where he relies on his title, and his evidence shows that a paramount outstanding title to the property is in a third person.⁵² If plaintiff alleges a willful trespass his action does not fail if it develops that the trespass was inadvertent or in good faith.⁵³ Defendant's admission of possession of the property precludes any inquiry as to a variance between allegations and proof of description.⁵⁴

§ 228. Presumptions and Burden of Proof

The plaintiff in an action of bail trover has the burden of showing that he is entitled to recover, and the defendant has the burden of proving affirmative matters asserted by him. Title is presumed to follow possession of the property.

In accordance with the general rule that the burden of proof is on the party who has the affirmative of the issue as determined by the pleadings, plaintiff in an action of bail trover has the burden of showing that he is entitled to recover,⁵⁵ as where both plaintiff and defendant claim title and defendant files no affirmative plea.⁵⁶ The burden is on plaintiff to show title in himself,⁵⁷ or right of possession,⁵⁸ and in some instances he must show both.⁵⁹ Title is presumed to follow possession of the property.⁶⁰ Where such fact is necessary to

Surrender of possession

Where plaintiff has by contract surrendered possession to another, he cannot recover possession by mere proof of title. He must also prove right of possession.—Carter v. Hornsby, 23 S.E. 2d 95, 68 Ga.App. 424—Birmingham Fertilizer Co. v. Dozier, 79 S.E. 927, 13 Ga.App. 759.

recovery, the burden is on plaintiff to show prior possession in himself⁶¹ and a conversion by defendant.⁶² It has been held that where the parties both claim title from a common grantor, it is unnecessary for plaintiff to show title in such common grantor.⁶³ When plaintiff elects to take a money judgment he must show the value of the property.⁶⁴

The burden of showing the true value of the property shifts to defendant where, by his wrongful conversion, he has put it beyond the power of plaintiff to prove such value.⁶⁵ If defendant claims a reduction of the damages by reason of the fact that he has enhanced the value of the article innocently converted, the burden is on him to show the facts necessary to the establishment of this defense,⁶⁶ including proof as to the value that has been added to the property.⁶⁷ If he claims a reduction of damages by reason of his good faith in committing the conversion he has the burden of proving his good faith.⁶⁸ It will be presumed that a father, instead of his unmarried son who lives with him, is the owner of chattels on the premises.⁶⁹

§ 229. Admissibility of Evidence

Any evidence properly admissible in a common-law action of detinue, replevin, or trover, is admissible in an action of bail trover.

The rules relating to admissibility of evidence in civil actions generally are applicable in an action of bail trover.⁷⁰ Since the statutory action of bail trover is available in any case in which replevin, detinue, or trover could be used at common law, as discussed supra § 202, all proof which would be admissible at common law in those actions is admissible under a petition in bail trover.⁷¹ Accordingly, evidence is admissible to prove⁷² or disprove⁷³ plaintiff's title; to prove title in defendant;⁷⁴ to prove⁷⁵ or disprove⁷⁶ defendant's possession of the particular property sued for; to prove that defendant has settled or accounted for the goods converted;⁷⁷ to disprove conversion by defendant;⁷⁸ to prove good faith of defendant;⁷⁹ to prove the value of the property;⁸⁰ to mitigate the trees of kinds specified had been cut on plaintiffs' lands and hauled therefrom by defendants, and that the trees were carried to company's saw mill where the trees, inferentially, were manufactured into lumber, court properly admitted a witness to testify, over defendants' objection, as to price of lumber made from trees of a stated kind, though there was no direct evidence to show that trees of such kind cut from plaintiffs' lands had been manufactured into lumber.—McCann Lumber Co. v. ownership or control wrongfully exercised over plaintiff's property will suffice as proof of a conversion.⁸⁸ Promissory notes are evidence of their own value in an action to recover them.⁸⁹

Prima facie case. Proof of title to the property in plaintiff, possession in defendant, a demand for possession and a refusal thereof, prior to the filing of the suit, makes a prima facie case for recovery,⁹⁰ although it does not appear that defendant was in possession at the time the suit was filed.⁹¹ Plaintiff establishes a prima facie case by proving a bill of sale from one in possession claiming title,⁹² which defendant may rebut by showing his possession subsequent to that of plaintiff's vendor.⁹³ It has been said that plaintiff makes out a prima facie case in a trover suit by showing proof of his peaceable possession of the property sued for and the wrongful interference therewith by defendant, where defendant is shown neither to have been wrongfully deprived of the property nor to be the true owner thereof.⁹⁴ The value of the property as set out in plaintiff's affidavit for bail⁹⁵ or the agreed price, as stated in a contract of sale between the parties, of the property in suit,⁹⁶ is prima facie evidence of the actual value thereof; but the bond given by defendant is not,⁹⁷ and, as against one not a party to the contract, the amount stated in a contract of purchase is of no such evidentiary value.⁹⁸

§ 231. Trial

§ 232. — Questions of Law and Fact

- a. In general
- b. Taking case from jury

a. In General

In actions of bail trover, as in other civil actions, questions of fact are for the jury.

In an action of bail trover, as in other civil actions, as discussed in Trial § 203 et seq, questions of fact are for the jury,⁹⁹ and issues of fact must be submitted to them.¹ Thus, on conflicting evidence it is for the jury to determine whether plaintiff had title or right of possession;² whether the facts adduced in evidence establish an unlawful conversion;³ the value of the property allegedly converted;⁴ or of plaintiff's equity therein;⁵ whether defendant's possession was in good faith;⁶ and the credibility of witnesses.⁷

On election to take property

Plaintiff in a trover action, having elected to take a verdict for property, waiving verdict for value and hire thereof, by offering evidence tending to prove title, conversion of property by defendant, demand therefor, and defendant's refusal to deliver

b. Taking Case from Jury

- (1) In general
- (2) Dismissal or nonsuit
- (3) Direction of verdict

(1) In General

In an action of bail trover if there is an entire absence of proof of some fact indispensable to a recovery the court may and should withdraw the case from the consideration of the jury.

In an action of bail trover, as in other civil actions, discussed in Trial § 203 et seq. if there is an entire absence of proof of some fact indispensable to a recovery the court may and should withdraw the case from the consideration of the jury.⁸ In view of the fact that issues of fact must be submitted to the jury, as discussed supra subdivision a of this section, the court should not take the case away from the jury where the evidence is such as to raise issues of fact.⁹

(2) Dismissal or Nonsuit

In an action of bail trover, a nonsuit may be granted where the plaintiff fails to establish a material allegation of his petition. A nonsuit in bail trover, where the plaintiff has obtained possession of the property, does not conclude him on the merits.

A nonsuit in an action of bail trover will be justified by plaintiff's failure to offer evidence tending to prove a material allegation of his petition¹⁰ or where his evidence disproves a material allegation,¹¹ but a nonsuit will not be justified by a failure to prove a matter immaterial to the case.¹² A nonsuit is properly granted in the absence of proof of value where plaintiff elects to take a money verdict;¹³ where there is no evidence to establish plaintiff's title to the personal property sued for¹⁴ or to establish actual conversion or that defendant was in possession of the property at the time the action was brought;¹⁵ or where there is no proof of a demand or an actual conversion before suit brought;¹⁶ and the case may be dismissed for want of prosecution.¹⁷

It is not ground for a nonsuit, however, that the value of the property has not been shown before an election to recover damages instead of the identical property, where it does not appear that it is beyond the power of defendant to restore the property;¹⁸ that plaintiff has not announced his election of the form of verdict which he desires when his evidence closes;¹⁹ especially where, on defendant's failure to give bond in a bail proceeding, plaintiff gave bond, took possession of the property, and sold some of it, so that he could not have elected to take a money verdict;²⁰ that a defense was improperly allowed interposed by amendment to the plea;²¹ or, as to other defendants, that plaintiff has failed to prove a conversion against an unnecessary party defendant.²² The fact that the affidavit to hold to bail is defective and not amended is not cause for dismissing the petition.²³ Evidence of defendant's possession when the action was brought may be inferential²⁴ and need not be strong to prevent a nonsuit.²⁵

A judgment for nonsuit should not be awarded where the evidence is sufficient to sustain a verdict for plaintiff,²⁶ where there is some evidence on which a verdict for plaintiff might be based,²⁷ where there is sufficient evidence of a conversion to raise a question for the jury,²⁸ where the evidence as to ownership is conflicting²⁹ or where the evidence is sufficient to sustain allegations of fraud against defendant.³⁰

prosecuting his action, and plaintiff dismissed his action and thereafter commenced an identical action in the city court, dismissal of the second action on the theory that it violated the injunction granted on the ground that defendant's defenses were shut off in the original action has been held improper, since by dismissal of the first action and the filing of the identical suit all defenses of defendant were available to him.³¹

Effect. The granting of a nonsuit in an action of bail trover, where plaintiff has obtained possession of the property, does not conclude him on the merits of the action³² even though defendant obtains a money judgment on the bond in lieu of a judgment of restitution;³³ but dismissal by plaintiff estops him from litigating any further in the same suit³⁴ and he cannot take advantage of any of the defenses set up by defendant in his answer.³⁵

(3) Direction of Verdict

Where, in an action of bail trover, only one verdict can be returned under the law and the evidence, it is proper to direct a verdict.

Only where but one verdict can be returned under the law and the evidence is it permissible to direct a verdict.³⁶ A verdict may be directed for plaintiff where there is no conflict in the evidence, and the evidence with all reasonable deductions therefrom demands a verdict for plaintiff.³⁷ A verdict is properly directed for defendant where the evidence offered by plaintiff to show title or right of possession is inconclusive³⁸ or hearsay and of no probative value,³⁹ or where the evidence demands a finding that plaintiff has neither title to the chattel nor the right to its possession.⁴⁰ Issues of fact, however, must be submitted to the jury, as discussed supra subdivision a of this section, and the court should not direct a verdict where the evidence is such as to raise issues for the jury,⁴¹ where the verdict is not the only possible result which could be reached by the jury,⁴² or where it is not authorized by the pleading and evidence.⁴³ Where it is essential to a recovery that a conversion prior to the bringing of the action be proved, a verdict should not be directed for plaintiff where the evidence does not show with certainty that there was a conversion.⁴⁴ Although there are conflicts in the testimony, if such conflicts are not material a verdict may properly be directed.⁴⁵

§ 233. — Instructions

The court, in an action of bail trover, must properly instruct the jury with respect to the law governing the case.

The rules relating to instructions to the jury in civil cases generally govern and control the instructions in actions of bail trover.⁴⁶ Accordingly, they must conform to the issues,⁴⁷ must not invade the province of the jury,⁴⁸ must not be misleading⁴⁹ or confusing to the jury,⁵⁰ must be adapted to the evidence,⁵¹ and must not express an opinion as to a point on which there is an issue of fact.⁵² The instructions should not ignore or exclude from the consideration of the jury competent evidence in the case,⁵³ or issues which there is evidence tending to support.⁵⁴

It is the duty of the court to instruct the jury to render the verdict which plaintiff has elected if they find in his favor.⁵⁵ Proper instructions should be given as to what plaintiff may recover on his election to take a verdict for damages alone.⁵⁶ An instruction which gives plaintiff a right of election as to the measure of damages where defendant asks for, and is entitled to, affirmative relief is erroneous,⁵⁷ as is one requiring that, before plaintiff could recover, it must have appeared that defendant was in possession of the property at the time of the filing of the suit.⁵⁸ Where the pleadings and evidence indisputably establish a conversion unless defendant has title, there is no prejudicial error in failing to charge the law of conversion.⁵⁹

§ 234. — Verdict and Findings in General

- a. In general
- b. Responsiveness

a. In General

The verdict ordinarily to be rendered in an action of bail trover is either for the plaintiff or the defendant, and is governed by the general rules applicable in civil actions.

The verdict ordinarily to be rendered in an action of bail trover is either for plaintiff or for defendant.⁶⁰ It must not be vague or uncertain,⁶¹ and a verdict for a stated sum as principal and a stated sum as interest is too uncertain to be upheld;⁶² but a verdict is not necessarily incompetent to support a judgment for a specific amount of money merely because in finding the right to a money recovery it fails to find in any specific amount.⁶³ A verdict which, although not expressed in a gross sum, indicates the intention of the jury, so that it is a mere matter of calculation to ascertain the gross sum which the jury intended to find, is sufficient.⁶⁴ The verdict must be supported by the evidence.⁶⁵ If a verdict is rendered for plaintiff,

Lump sum verdict

(1) Where plaintiff in trover elects to take a money verdict, proper practice is for jury to return a verdict in a lump sum, including value of the property and interest, or value of property and hire—Douglas Motor Co. v. Watson, 22 S.E.2d 766, 68 Ga.App. 335—Keel v. Attaway, 15 S.E.2d 562, 65 Ga.App. 172—Stephens v. Wilson, 197 S.E. 350, 58 Ga.App. 24—Beaver v. Magid, 192 S.E. 497, 56 Ga.App. 272—White v. Dalton, 191 S.E. 386, 55 Ga.App. 768—65 C.J. p 171 note 51 [b].

(2) In trover suit where plaintiff elected to take a money verdict, verdict for principal and interest separately instead of for a lump sum, was error, and judgment would be reversed, unless interest should be written off by plaintiff at time of the remittitur—Adams v. Webb, 32 S.E.2d 922, 72 Ga.App. 66.

63. Ga.—Pound v. Baldwin, 131 S.E. 291, 34 Ga.App. 810.

64. Ga.—O'Neil Mfg. Co. v. Woodley, 44 S.E. 980, 118 Ga. 114.
65 C.J. p 171 note 53.

65. Ga.—Bridges v. Griffin, 93 S.E. 170, 20 Ga.App. 598.

Verdict held supported by evidence
Ga.—Bridges v. Griffin, 93 S.E. 170, 20 Ga.App. 598.

Verdict held unsupported by evidence
Ga.—Sammons v. Copeland, 69 S.E. 2d 617, 85 Ga.App. 318—Ruzenberg v. Sund, 60 S.E.2d 390, 81 Ga.App. 856.
65 C.J. p 126 note 33 [c].

its legal effect is that he shall have the property sued for,⁶⁶ and, where plaintiff has elected to take the property with hire, a verdict finding for him but that he recover nothing for hire is not void for uncertainty.⁶⁷ A verdict finding the property in dispute in favor of defendant will, at his instance, be construed as one finding for him for the value of the property⁶⁸ in the amount established by plaintiff's affidavit for bail;⁶⁹ and this is true notwithstanding he did not, prior to the rendition thereof, elect to take such a verdict.⁷⁰

Where the losing party is in possession of the property, a money verdict in favor of the prevailing party is permissible⁷¹ even though that party be defendant.⁷² A money verdict rendered for plaintiff at his election represents the damages he has sustained;⁷³ and it is not essential to its validity, where plaintiff does not so elect, that it shall provide for the making of the money out of the property.⁷⁴ A money verdict for defendant in replevin is not demanded, as a matter of law, where he has no title or interest in the property⁷⁵ or where the property seized was in possession of one defendant as custodian for a levying officer of another court.⁷⁶ A verdict improperly written on the bail affidavit may be transferred to the declaration.⁷⁷

Agreed substitute. A verdict giving the prevailing party that which the parties had acknowledged in court to be an agreed substitute for the property instead of the property itself is sufficient.⁷⁸

Relief awarded. A verdict seeking to compel such affirmative action by defendant as an indorsement and delivery of certificates other than those sued for, a delivery of cash deposited in a foreign state in the name of defendant as administrator under appointment in that state, and to have an equitable settlement of the accounts of defendant as such administrator, is unauthorized.⁷⁹

b. Responsiveness

The verdict in bail trover must be responsive to the pleadings and evidence.

In accordance with the general rule in civil actions, the verdict and findings in bail trover must respond to the issues as raised by the pleadings and evidence.⁸⁰ In order to authorize a money verdict there must be some evidence of the value of the personalty converted.⁸¹ A verdict awarding plaintiff the property when he elected to take a money verdict is erroneous.⁸² A verdict awarding the property to defendant is contrary to law where it is undisputed that the title to, and right of possession of, the property were in plaintiff who had demanded it.⁸³

§ 235. — Election of Verdict

a. In general

b. Time for making election

a. In General

Under the statute providing the remedy of bail trover, the plaintiff may say whether he will accept an alternative verdict for the property or its value, or demand a verdict for damages alone, or the property alone, and its hire; and in a proper case the defendant is entitled to a like election.

It is provided by statute that plaintiff, in an action to recover property, may, on the trial, say whether he will accept an alternative verdict for the property or its value, or demand a verdict for damages alone, or the property alone, and its hire;⁸⁴ and, inasmuch as the law entertains an impartial reciprocity of protection between the parties,⁸⁵ where plaintiff has given bond and taken the Purpose of statute providing for election by plaintiff in trover action as to whether he wishes to recover property or its value, damages or hire and providing that it is duty of court to render verdict as plaintiff elects, if plaintiff is successful, is to enable jury to render intelligent verdict, as regards recovery.—Banks v. Kilday, 76 S.E.2d 642, 88 Ga.App. 307.

property and is then cast in the suit or dismisses the action, defendant is entitled to a like election.⁸⁶ Failure to allege the value of the articles to be recovered, however, precludes plaintiff from exercising his option to elect an alternative verdict,⁸⁷ and he has no such option if defendant at the first term tenders the property to plaintiff together with reasonable hire thereon;⁸⁸ but the tender is not available to defeat plaintiff's right where it does not embrace all the property claimed by plaintiff,⁸⁹ where made after refusal to return the goods on demand,⁹⁰ or where made after the first term.⁹¹ Even after the first term defendant may make such a tender so as to limit plaintiff's recovery to the property,⁹² but in order to do this, the tender must be made prior to the exercise of plaintiff's option of alternative verdict.⁹³

Where neither party replevies property seized by the sheriff under bail process, and it is sold as perishable or expensive to keep, the successful plaintiff, being limited by statutory provision to a money verdict for the proceeds, cannot elect to take a verdict and judgment for the property;⁹⁴ but this rule is not applicable as to property not included in the sale.⁹⁵ A party's right to elect a money verdict is not lost by reason of the fact that he purchased the property when sold by the sheriff as perishable or expensive to keep⁹⁶ or by reason of the fact that he has instituted bail proceedings,⁹⁷ even though defendant may not have regained possession of the property,⁹⁸ or, although on failure of defendant to give bond, plaintiff replevied the property himself and has it in his possession when the verdict is returned.⁹⁹

Where plaintiff receives the property from the executing officer, however, and thereafter disposes of it so as to put it beyond his power to return it, he is not entitled to elect to take a money verdict,¹ although he may proceed for hire and cost.² So where defendant fails to replevy property taken by bail process, and restoration thereafter becomes impossible without fault on his part, plaintiff cannot take a money verdict except for hire and costs.³

The election may be made in the complaint, or at any time during the course of the proceedings.

Although plaintiff may do so in his complaint,⁴ he is not required to make his election at the beginning of the trial⁵ or at the close of his evidence,⁶ but may make it at the conclusion of the taking of the testimony⁷ or after the close of the argument and before the case is submitted to the jury;⁸ and, in the absence of objection, the court may recall the jury after they have retired, and permit plaintiff to change his election.⁹

§ 236. Judgment and Effect Thereof

- a. In general
- b. Conclusiveness on surety

a. In General

The successful party in an action of bail trover is entitled to such a judgment as the pleading and proof warrant.

The successful party in an action of bail trover is entitled to such a judgment as the pleading and

proof warrant,¹⁰ but the judgment, in accordance with general rules, must conform to the pleadings, issues, and proof.¹¹ Plaintiff cannot recover an amount larger than he sues for, as shown by his pleadings,¹² and recovery cannot legally exceed the alleged value,¹³ with interest.¹⁴ A judgment dismissing an action of bail trover is amendable at the same term of court.¹⁵ A judgment will not be set aside merely because the property is loosely described in the petition,¹⁶ and an immaterial departure from the verdict is not ground for reversal.¹⁷

Election of judgment. In an action of bail trover tried without a jury, an election to take a money judgment may be made at any time before rendition of judgment.¹⁸

Satisfaction of judgment. An alternative judgment in trover can be satisfied only by restoring the whole of the property or paying the entire amount of damages,¹⁹ and restoration of part of the property and payment for the remainder is not sufficient.²⁰

b. Conclusiveness on Surety

The plaintiff may have judgment against the defendant and his surety, and as against the latter the judgment is conclusive until reversed or set aside.

The bail of a defendant who has given bond is bound by the judgment equally with defendant.²¹

10. Judgment held proper

Where plaintiff in petition in trover suit alleged title to various items of personal property, including certain described cash, and sought recovery therefor, and jury found in its favor, trial court had authority to decide in judgment that title to and right of possession of the cash had been established in plaintiff and to direct sheriff to deliver the cash to plaintiff.—Harris v. Bennett Bros., 34 S.E.2d 615, 72 Ga.App. 589

Conformity to election

Where plaintiff in bail trover action did not specifically pray in original petition for a property judgment, but at trial elected to take verdict for property, and jury was so instructed, trial judge was without authority to render a money judgment concluding the matter otherwise without first giving plaintiff an opportunity to be heard.—Zachos v. Rowland, 55 S.E.2d 166, 80 Ga.App. 31.

15. Gu—Calloway v. McElmurray, 17 S.E. 103, 91 Ga. 166, 65 C.J. p 173 note 6.

Reinstatement of case

Where trial judge in bail trover action rendered order dismissing plaintiff's action and marked case settled without notice to plaintiff although plaintiff had elected a property verdict, judgment so rendered was void, and judge at subsequent hearing could grant motion placing case on trial docket notwithstanding motion contained no prayer that order be vacated or set aside.—Zachos v. Rowland, 55 S.E.2d 166, 80 Ga.App. 31.

and, where plaintiff recovers a verdict, he may have judgment rendered thereon against defendant and his sureties jointly, without scire facias or other proceedings.²² A judgment against defendant and his surety in bail trover, finding the property for plaintiff, is conclusive against the surety until reversed or set aside;²³ and the latter cannot, in a subsequent suit instituted by him against plaintiff in the trover action, go behind the judgment and assert title to an interest in the property alleged to have existed at the time of the judgment.²⁴ The surety on an eventual condemnation bond cannot, after judgment, raise any question which his principal might have raised before judgment.²⁵

c. Effect of Judgment or Satisfaction on Title to Property

A judgment for the plaintiff vests title to the property absolutely in him, and a money judgment in his favor becomes a special lien on the property sued for, and a general lien on all other property of the defendant.

The judgment in trover vests title absolutely in plaintiff, as far as the property itself is concerned.²⁶ A verdict for damages for plaintiff in a trover suit does not vest the property in defendant until the judgment for damages has been discharged by him,²⁷ but when defendant discharges such judgment, his title to the property, as far as plaintiff is concerned, becomes absolute.²⁸ So, by taking a money judgment in an action where plaintiff has obtained possession of the property, defendant relinquishes all right to subsequent possession thereof.²⁹ Where a money judgment is elected, the judgment for plaintiff becomes a special lien on the property sued for,³⁰ and a general lien on all other property of defendant.³¹

§ 237. — Judgment for Defendant

Where the defendant in bail trover is entitled to judgment, he may be entitled to demand and have restitution of the property, or a judgment for its value and damages for loss of its use.

Where uncontradicted evidence shows plaintiff has no title or right to possession, defendant is entitled to judgment.³² Where the property is taken in bail proceedings from defendant, who fails to replevy it, and plaintiff dismisses the action or refuses to prosecute or is cast in the suit, defendant is entitled to demand a restitution of the property,³³ or a judgment against plaintiff for its value³⁴ and damages for loss of the use,³⁵ whether³⁶ or not³⁷ plaintiff replevied the property; and defendant, in order to obtain this relief, is not required to bring a separate suit,³⁸ or, if he is content with the value stated in plaintiff's affidavit to obtain bail, adduce

A dismissal amounts in law to a judgment of restitution⁴⁰ and ipso facto entitles defendant to a writ of restitution or a verdict for the property⁴¹ and its reasonable hire.⁴² Where there has been no adjudication of title, however, it is error, after awarding nonsuit, to permit defendant to adduce evidence as to the value of the property sued for and to enter judgment in the amount so found against plaintiff and sureties on a bail trover bond,⁴³ the proper practice in such case being to restore possession of the property to defendant so as to leave the parties as near as possible where the court found them.⁴⁴

Defendant may recover the value of the property against plaintiff replevying the property but dismissing suit, although defendant does not claim title but holds possession for a special purpose or under a limited right,⁴⁵ the money recovered in such case being held for the benefit of all persons having lawful claims in the property according to their respective interests.⁴⁶ Where defendant has a special interest in the property taken by plaintiff under bail process, title thereto being admittedly in plain-

On dismissal of second suit

Where bail trover action was dismissed by plaintiff, and trial court did not retain jurisdiction for purpose of rendering judgment against plaintiff, and plaintiff thereafter commenced the same action against defendant, trial court could not, when second action was improperly dismissed, render judgment for defendant against plaintiff for amount that property was alleged to be worth in original action.—Frimm v. Mathis, 7 S.E.2d 295, 61 Ga.App. 679.

Failure to recover

Within statute, providing that when plaintiff in trover suit has replevied property and, on trial "fails to recover," defendant may recover sworn value placed upon property, the quoted phrase means failure to recover on the merits, and a judgment sustaining a jurisdictional plea in bail-trover suit did not have effect of adjudicating defendant's right to hold the property against plaintiff in another trover suit and did not entitle defendant to recover sworn value placed upon the property.—Futch v. Automobile Financing, 80 S.E.2d 697, 89 Ga.App. 634.

Petition held insufficient

Petition, filed by successful defendant in trover suit, seeking money judgment for sworn value of property, was fatally defective in that it failed to allege that plaintiff in trover suit had replevied the property or had dismissed such suit or had failed to recover on the merits.—Futch v. Automobile Financing, supra.

Reinstatement of case

Trial court had no jurisdiction to reinstate over objection of defendant, bail trover action voluntarily dismissed by plaintiff, in absence of proof that such dismissal was induced by fraud or mutual mistake of law as to effect of such dismissal, and court must enter restitution judgment for defendant on motion by defendant.—Stewart v. Hasty, 48 S.E.2d 757, 77 Ga.App. 524.

tiff, a general verdict for defendant warrants a judgment for the return of the property to him or, in default thereof, that he recover the amount of his special interest therein.⁴⁷

§ 238. Costs

In bail trover costs will be charged to the plaintiff or defendant in accordance with the provisions of the bail trover statute.

Under the statute requiring plaintiff to pay the costs of the action in the absence of proof of a previous demand and refusal, where defendant at the first term tenders the property to plaintiff together with reasonable hire therefor since the conversion, the tender must embrace all the property claimed by plaintiff⁴⁸ and must be unconditional.⁴⁹ A tender of the property made after institution of the suit is not in compliance with the statute if unaccompanied by tender of hire,⁵⁰ and a tender will not throw the costs on plaintiff if made after the first term.⁵¹ A tender of the property without a tender of hire is sufficient if the property is worth nothing for hire,⁵² or if there has been no conversion.⁵³ Although plaintiff in an action brought without previous demand has obtained possession of the property, thus making it impossible for defendant to tender such property, if the latter fails to disclaim title and tender reasonable hire he is liable for costs in the suit.⁵⁴

Tender of cumbrous articles. Where the property consists of cumbrous articles and plaintiff is a non-resident of the county in which they are situated, a bona fide offer to deliver such property at any railroad station within the county which plaintiff may select constitutes a tender sufficient to charge plaintiff with costs.⁵⁵

Counsel fees are not recoverable as costs where the property was tendered before suit, and the tender refused and no subsequent demand was made for it.⁵⁶

§ 239. Damages

- a. In general
- b. Interest
- c. Hire
- d. Effect of particular circumstances
- e. Mitigation or reduction of damages

a. In General

In bail trover the criterion of damages is the true value of the property. In a proper case, the plaintiff may elect to recover the highest proved value of the property at any time between the time of conversion and the trial, or the value at the time of conversion with interest or hire.

The criterion of damages in a suit in trover is the true value of the property.⁵⁷ Where plaintiff elects to take a money judgment instead of a return of the property, he has a further right to elect in what way his damages shall be made up.⁵⁸ He may, subject to the qualification that the amount of his recovery is limited to the value of the property alleged in the pleadings, recover the highest proved value of the property, at any time between the time of the conversion and the time of the trial,⁵⁹ without hire, as discussed infra subdivision c of this section, or interest, as discussed subdivision b of

Highest proved value

(1) For purposes of rule providing that plaintiff in trover action may recover the "highest proved value" of personality between date of conversion and date of trial, means highest value which jury, from consideration of all proofs, may fix.—Sammons v. Copeland, 69 S.E.2d 617, 85 Ga.App. 318—Sapp v. Howe, 52 S.E. 2d 571, 79 Ga.App. 1—65 C.J. p 174 note 43 [A], p 138 note 21 [d].

(2) In trover suit, the "highest proved value" of the property is not the highest estimate of value given by any witness, but the highest value which jury finds that the property was worth between time of conversion and time of trial, if there was a change in value.—Durden v. Durden, 197 S.E. 493, 58 Ga.App. 46.

this section, or he may recover the value at the time of the conversion with interest or such hire as he may be able to prove.⁶⁰ This right of election applies whether the prevailing party is plaintiff⁶¹ or defendant.⁶²

A party's right to recover the value of the property is not affected by the fact that he may have purchased it for less than its value⁶³ or received it as a gift;⁶⁴ and plaintiff's recovery against the principal in the bail-bond is not limited to the amount of such bond.⁶⁵ If plaintiff elects to recover an alternative verdict, and by the wrongful conversion it has been placed beyond his power to show the true value of the property, if no value be shown by defendant, plaintiff may recover the highest value of the best quality of such property.⁶⁶ Attorney's fees⁶⁷ and expenses of suit⁶⁸ which have been incurred in litigation against a third person for recovery of the property have been held an element of damage.

Exemplary damages have been allowed.⁶⁹

Timber cut and carried away. The measure of damages for timber cut and carried away has been fixed by statute, and plaintiff may recover accordingly.⁷⁰

Contract price of a chattel is not the measure of its damages as against one not a party to the contract,⁷¹ nor is the price fixed as between the parties

by an option contract where the option expired before the accrual of the action.⁷²

Cost of transportation may be a material factor in determining the value of the chattel converted.⁷³

b. Interest

Interest, eo nomine, is not recoverable in a bail trover action.

Interest, eo nomine, is not recoverable in a bail trover action.⁷⁴ Such an allowance is not awarded as interest but as additional damages,⁷⁵ and the allowance is discretionary with the jury.⁷⁶ The allowance of such additional damages, the equivalent of interest is predicated on the ground that plaintiff, having been unlawfully deprived of his property, is entitled to be fully compensated for the wrong inflicted, and calculation on a basis of interest at a certain percentage is deemed a proper measure for the additional damages.⁷⁷ If plaintiff elects to recover, as damages, the highest proved value of the property at any time between the time of the conversion and the time of the trial, no interest on that amount is allowable.⁷⁸ If plaintiff elects to recover the value of the property at the time of its conversion, he is entitled to interest to the time of the trial.⁷⁹ Where the only evidence of the value of the property is as to its value at the date of conversion, the measure of damages is that amount with interest to the time of the trial.⁸⁰ In accordance with the rule that verdicts should be construed so as to stand and are not to be avoided unless from necessity, as discussed generally in Trial § 521, where the only evidence of the value of the property is as to its value at the date of conversion, a verdict for plaintiff for a stated sum with interest will be construed to mean that the jury found the stated sum to be the value of the property at the time of the conversion, rather than at some date between the time of conversion and the trial.⁸¹

Reasonable hire is recoverable on election to take a return of the property, or on election to recover the value of the property at the time of conversion.

Hire, by that name, is not recoverable in a verdict for damages alone,⁸² but is allowable as an additional element of damages,⁸³ and the allowance thereof is discretionary with the jury.⁸⁴ Where the prevailing party elects to take a return of the property converted by the other, he is also entitled to recover reasonable hire for it from the date of the conversion⁸⁵ to the date when the property is delivered in accordance with the verdict.⁸⁶ Where plaintiff elects to recover the highest proved value of the property at any time between the time of the conversion and the time of trial he is not entitled to hire.⁸⁷ If plaintiff elects to recover the value of the property at the time of the conversion,⁸⁸ and the property converted is of such a character that hire for it may be recovered,⁸⁹ he is entitled to reasonable⁹⁰ hire for it from the date of conversion to the date of trial, except that if the amount of the hire is not stated in the affidavit he cannot recover the hire from the time of the conversion,⁹¹ but only from the time of filing his affidavit and declaration.⁹²

(2) Sale of property as perishable or expensive to keep

(3) Special interest in property

(1) Conversion of Promissory Notes

On conversion of a promissory note the measure of damages is prima facie the amount of principal and interest due and unpaid at the time of conversion with interest.

The measure of damages for the conversion of promissory notes is prima facie the amount of the principal and interest appearing at the time of conversion to be owing and unpaid,⁹³ with interest on that aggregate from thence to the trial.⁹⁴

(2) Sale of Property as Perishable or Expensive to Keep

Where perishable property is sold the measure of recovery is the proceeds of the sale.

Where under the statute permitting it, the property is sold by the sheriff as perishable or expensive to keep, it is error to direct a verdict for more than the amount of the proceeds of the sale.⁹⁵ Where, however, only part of the property sued for has been sold, as to the part not sold plaintiff may recover a money judgment the amount of which may be added to the sum recoverable on account of the property sold.⁹⁶

(3) Special Interest in Property

Where the plaintiff has only a special interest in the property his recovery ordinarily is limited to the value of his special interest.

Even though plaintiff has only a special interest in the property sued for in trover, and elects to take a money verdict, he may make the further election between the highest proved value and the value at the time of the conversion with interest or hire,⁹⁷ but his recovery ordinarily is limited to the value of his special interest.⁹⁸ Thus, where plaintiff sues for property, the title to which he holds merely as security, and elects to take a money verdict, he cannot recover more than the debts secured.⁹⁹ A distinction has been made, however, between cases in which the action is brought against the general owner or against a stranger or wrongdoer,² if against the general owner, then plaintiff can recover the value of his special property only;² but if the suit is against a stranger or wrongdoer, plaintiff recovers the full value of the property, and holds the balance, beyond his own interest, for the general owner³ and all others in community of possession or title with him, as their respective interests may appear.⁴

Sale with reservation of title. Where, in a suit for the recovery of personalty sold of which the seller had reserved title and which has been partly paid for, plaintiff elects to take a money verdict, the proper amount to be recovered is the unpaid balance of the purchase money, with interest thereon, embraced in an aggregate sum;⁵ and if plaintiff elects to recover the specific property, before doing so he must return the money paid him after deducting reasonable hire.⁶

Generally, the defendant is entitled to show in mitigation of damages any facts or circumstances which would reduce the amount required justly to compensate the plaintiff.

Defendant is entitled to a deduction from the value of the converted property of all sums received by the owner on account thereof.⁷ Thus where, after a party chargeable with fraud has refused to accept the return of the property transferred by him and to retransfer the property received by him, and after an action by the defrauded party to recover the property transferred by him or its value has been commenced, the defrauded party disposes of the property received by him, defendant is entitled to have the fair market value or the fruits of the disposition applied in mitigation of the damages.⁸ Although defendant is, under certain circumstances, permitted to set off the value of his labor and expense by which property innocently converted was improved, he can in no case reduce plaintiff's recovery below the value his chattel would have had if left in the state in which the wrongdoer found it.⁹ The converter of a promissory note has the right to show in reduction the fact of payment in whole or in part,¹⁰ the inability of the makers to pay wholly or partially,¹¹ a release of the makers from their undertaking,¹² the invalidity of the notes,¹³ or other matter which will legitimately affect and diminish their value.¹⁴

Surrender of property after conversion, although not defeating the action, goes in mitigation of damages.¹⁵ A tender of return, in order effectively to go in mitigation of damages, must embrace all the property claimed by plaintiff¹⁶ and must be unconditional.¹⁷

§ 240. Liability on Bonds and Undertakings

General rules governing liability of principals on bonds apply to principals on bonds given in bail trover actions.

Where plaintiff has given bond and obtained possession of the property in suit, on dismissal of the action, the court is authorized to enter judgment on the replevy bond for the value of the property,¹⁸ and it is not necessary to bring suit on the bond¹⁹ or have a jury trial.²⁰ The rule is applicable notwithstanding defendant may not claim any title to the property and holds possession only for some special purposes or under some limited right or title,²¹ the money recovered in such case being held by defendant for the benefit of all persons having lawful claims to the property according as their interests may appear.²² The court has no jurisdiction to enter judgment on the bond where no process is attached to the petition or served on defendant and the deficiency has not been waived.²³

§ 241. — Liability or Discharge of Surety

The liability of a surety, or his discharge therefrom, on bonds in a bail trover action is determined by the general rules governing liability and discharge of sureties.

A bond given by defendant as security for the forthcoming of the property renders the surety thereon liable for the eventful condemnation money as soon as plaintiff recovers in his action.²⁴ A person signing as additional surety on a bond given by defendant in bail trover, knowing that the bond had been refused for want of additional surety, and thereby enabling his principal to obtain the property, is liable on the bond regardless of whether his signing operated to discharge the other surety.²⁵ Where the action is brought against two persons who unite in one bond with another person as surety, plaintiff's failure to recover against one of the defendants does not discharge the surety;²⁶ and, where judgment is obtained against defendant and his surety for a certain sum with a special lien on the property, a levy thereon will not operate to discharge the surety where the levy is insufficient to satisfy the judgment,²⁷ nor will the taking of other property by the obligee from the principal on the bond under a claim of right be held to increase the risk of the surety on the bond or require credit for the property taken;²⁸ but a party, by taking possession of the property sued for after rendition of judgment in his favor, discharges the surety pro tanto in the amount of the value of the property.²⁹ Where plaintiff, in fieri facias on property belonging to the surety on a replevin bond, has removed part of the principal's property outside the county, such surety is discharged to the extent of the property thus removed.³⁰ A judgment of nonsuit in favor of defendant inures to the benefit of his surety on his forthcoming bond.³¹

§ 242. — Actions and Proceedings to Enforce

Actions on bonds in bail trover are governed by the rules applicable in actions on replevin or redelivery bonds.

The general rules applicable in actions on replevin and redelivery bonds are applicable in an action on a replevy bond given in a suit in trover.³² Where the evidence shows that defendant was surety on the bond sued on and liable as such, that he has not been released by the acts of plaintiff, and that plaintiff's verdict and judgment in the trover suit have not been satisfied, it is error to direct a verdict for defendant.³³

Surety on forthcoming bond was not a party to bail trover action against his principal and could not be made a party in renewal of action after nonsuit relieving defendant and surety of liability on bond; and after judgment of nonsuit the action could not be reinstated as against surety without notice to or service upon him and judgment against principal obtained without such notice or service, fi. fa. issued thereon, and levy thereunder were properly set aside as against surety—Larry Finance Co. v. Lanier, supra.

32. Defenses

That property described in a forthcoming bond is taken from obligor's possession under valid legal process superior to that under which the property was originally brought into law's possession may be shown as a defense to action on bond but it would be no defense if obligor surrendered property under a process which was invalid or inferior to lien or title upon which first proceeding was based—V. M. C. Products, Inc. v. Henry, 76 S.E.2d 451, 87 Ga.App. 827.

Burden of proof

Where obligor and surety assert as defense to action on forthcoming bond that property described in bond was taken from obligor's possession under valid legal process superior to that under which property was originally brought into law's possession, obligor and surety have burden of showing that process by which property was taken from obligor's possession was legally adequate.—V. M. C. Products, Inc. v. Henry, supra.

Admissibility of evidence

Where obligor and surety on forthcoming bond sought to show that breach of bond sued upon was occasioned by a levy under execution of lien superior to title of plaintiff in trover suit in which forthcoming bond was made, but it appeared by entry of levy of execution that other property had been previously levied upon which was worth more than amount of execution, and proceeds of first levy were unaccounted for, execution was shown prima facie to have been satisfied, and so invalid, and court did not err in excluding from evidence the execution and second levy thereon upon property described in forthcoming bond and in rendering judgment for plaintiff for value of such property.—V. M. C. Products, Inc. v. Henry, supra.

Evidence held sufficient

TRUANCY. A child is a truant if his parent fails to cause him to attend school as required by a compulsory attendance statute, as stated in Schools and School Districts § 471, and the subject of truancy is treated in that title §§ 471-474.

TRUCE. An agreement between belligerent forces for a temporary cessation of hostilities.¹ It has been compared with "armistice" see 6 C.J.S. p 342 note 58. The various methods of terminating a war are treated in the C.J.S. title War § 42, also 67 C.J. p 429 note 11-p 431 note 56.

TRUCK. Originally the word "truck" meant a strong, small wheel,² but it is now applied to any of numerous vehicles for transporting heavy articles,³ and it is defined generally as meaning a wheeled vehicle for carrying heavy weights;⁴ a strong vehicle for transporting freight, merchandise, and other heavy articles.⁵

The term is commonly employed to denote more than one kind or character of vehicle,⁶ and it may signify any strong, heavy cart or wagon, horse-drawn or self-propelled, for heavy handling;⁷ a kind of handbarrow or handcarts, consisting essentially of a strong, braced frame, terminating in a pair of handles at one end supported on a pair of small heavy wheels with broad rim,⁸ a small heavy rectangular frame supported on four small wheels, used instead of rollers for moving heavy objects, as on a floor;⁹ any of various small flat-topped cars for pulling or pushing by hand, with or without a handle and sometimes with stakes or vertical ends to prevent the load from falling off,¹⁰ used in shops, railroad stations, etc., for moving heavy articles.¹¹ The term may also signify a strong frame or platform on wheels such as is used for carrying baggage in and around railroad stations,¹² or a strong carriage used about a sawmill for conveying heavy timber.¹³ An open railroad freight car, a railway goods wagon,¹⁴ and a framework mounted on wheels and used to support one end of a locomotive,¹⁵ are all commonly referred to as trucks.

The word "truck" has been distinguished from "dolly" see 27 C.J.S. p 1317 note 9. It is stated in Motor Vehicles § 1 b (2) that the word "automobile" as used in statutes includes an automobile truck, auto truck, motor truck, or truck, and the term "automobile truck" is defined in Motor Vehicles § 4.

Payment of wages. The word "truck" is employed in a very specific sense to denote the payment of wages in goods instead of in cash,¹⁶ and in English law the "Truck Act" is the name given to St. 1 & 2 Wm. IV. c. 37, passed to abolish what is commonly called the "Truck System," under which employers were in the practice of paying the wages of their work people in goods, or of requiring them to purchase goods at certain shops.¹⁷

TRUMPET. A wind instrument consisting of a long metallic tube, commonly once or twice curved, with cup-shaped mouthpiece, and ending in a bell. It is typical of the well-known and ancient family of instruments giving their tones by the vibration of the player's lips against the mouthpiece of a long tube. Besides its fundamental tone, a series of harmonies can be produced by varying the force of blowing and the embouchure. Other tones are variously secured, as by means of finger holes and keys, as in the obsolete key bugle and serpent, of a slide, as in the trombone, or of valves, as in the modern cornet-a-pistons, which last give easily all the scale tones of its compass, although with some loss of purity.³⁷

TRUNK. In one sense the word "trunk" means the main body or stock of a tree, as distinguished from the branches and roots;³⁸ the body of a tree above the soil;³⁹ hence, the main or central body of any structure or system, as a railroad.⁴⁰

In a different sense, the word "trunk" means a light-framed box or case with a hinged lid, usually covered with leather and lined with linen or paper, and often having a tray, used for packing articles, as for a journey.⁴¹ In this sense "trunk" and "chest" are not synonymous as stated in 14 C.J.S. p 1103 note 61.

TRUSS. The dominant idea of a "truss" is that its members are fitted to interpose against the expected strain their capacity for resistance to longitudinal compression and are sufficiently rigid so that they will not buckle.⁴² The word is not completely appropriate as applied to certain wire structures for use in cushions or mattresses.⁴³

TRUST. The word "trust," as a noun, is defined in Trusts § 2, in its technical legal sense as the right, enforceable solely in equity, to the beneficial enjoyment of property the legal title to which is vested in another; and in a broader popular sense the term is frequently employed to indicate duties, relations, and responsibilities which are not strictly technical trusts. The various kinds and classes of trusts, such as express, implied, resulting, constructive, executed and executory, complete and incomplete, simple and special, passive and active, technical and operative, voluntary and involuntary, public and private, legal and illegal, and other kinds and classes of trusts are defined in Trusts §§ 10-21. As defined in Monopolies § 1 b, a "trust" is a combination, confederation, or contract, express or implied, between individuals or corporations or both, which aims at a union of energy, capital, and interest in order to eliminate competition, limit production, and control the price of commodities or services for the benefit of the parties thereto and to the injury of the public, and which tends to create a monopoly.

As a verb, the word "trust" is defined generally as meaning to repose trust in; rely upon; have faith in.⁴⁴ In a more specific sense the term relates to a person's financial ability to pay his debts,⁴⁵ and is defined as meaning to give credit to.⁴⁶

Trust company. The term "trust company" is sometimes employed to designate a bank, although there is a distinction between a trust company and a bank, which is stated in Banks and Banking § 1044. In its primary and ordinary sense the term "trust company" signifies a corporation organized for the purpose of accepting, administering, and executing trusts.⁴⁷ However, from the standpoint

Method of securing mercantile loans

"The essential character of the 'trust receipts' has long been understood by the mercantile and banking community. Such 'trust receipts' include the long-established method of securing mercantile loans by a transaction in which the lender, having no prior title to the goods upon which the loan is to be given, and without having possession, which remains in the borrower, lends his money to the borrower upon the security of the goods, which the borrower is privileged to sell clear of the lien, he agreeing to pay all or part of the proceeds of the sale to the lender. The documents in which the transactions are expressed are known in the business and banking world as 'trust receipts'."—In re Boswell, C.C.A. Cal., 20 F.2d 239, 241.

Used in domestic transactions

"In trade practice and by the support of the judicial authority, a trust receipt might equally be used in connection with a domestic transaction as it is used in an importation of merchandise."—In re James, Inc., C. C.A.N.Y., 30 F.2d 555, 557.

54. Original use

Trust receipts were originally employed as a convenient method of financing importations, and are still so used.—In re Bell Motor Co., C.C.A. Mo., 45 F.2d 19, 22.

Of vital importance in importing trade

By the arrangement known as the "trust receipt" plan a banker advances money to an intending importer, and thereby lends the aid of capital, of credit, and of business facilities and agencies abroad, to the enterprise of foreign commerce. This practice is of great importance to importers, and without it much of our foreign trade would be impossible because the individual importer lacks the necessary capital and foreign credit.—In re Dunlap Carpet Co., D.C.Pa., 206 F. 726, 730, 731.

As used in the importing trade

(1) The term "trust receipt" is applied to an instrument in writing whereby a banker, having advanced money for the purchase of imported merchandise and having taken title in his own name and retaining such title, delivers possession of the merchandise to the importer on an agreement in writing to hold the merchandise in trust for the banker until he is paid. The only kind of instrument which we have recognized and called a trust receipt is one where the banker at the request of the importer buys goods directly from the foreign seller and takes title in his own name from the foreign seller and then turns the goods which he has thus bought directly in his own name over to the importer on a trust receipt in order that the latter may carry on his own commercial adventure.—Simons v. Northeastern Finance Corporation, 171 N.E. 643, 644, 271 Mass. 285.

(2) A merchant who wishes to import goods for which he has not funds to pay obtains credit from a bank to a fixed amount, against which he draws for the price of the goods to the order of the vendor or the vendor draws for the price of the goods to his own order. The draft with the bill of lading indorsed in blank or to the order of the bank is forwarded by the vendor to the banker for acceptance. The banker accepts the draft payable in one, two, three, or four months, as the case may be, forwards the bill of lading indorsed in blank to his agent in New York, who delivers the same to the importer against a receipt called a trust receipt, whereby he agrees to sell the goods for account of the banker, to pay him the proceeds and so put him in funds to take up the acceptance at maturity.—In re Cattus, N.Y., 183 F. 733, 734, 106 C.C.A. 171.

(3) It is an instrument whereby the banker advancing the money on an importation takes title directly to himself, and as owner delivers the goods to the dealer in whose behalf he is acting secondarily and to whom the title ultimately is to go when the primary right of the banker has been satisfied, the title remaining in the banker until the price is paid to him.—People's Nat. Bank v. Mulholland, 117 N.E. 46, 47, 228 Mass. 152.

Use extended because of marketing of automobiles

The use of trust receipts has become greatly extended in the United States since the automobile has assumed its nationwide and popular and the same principles govern whether the transaction is domestic or the financing of imports.⁵⁶

As used in commerce by credit and financial agencies it is regarded as a security instrumentality which resembles a pledge, a chattel mortgage, or a conditional sales contract, but is exactly none of these mediums of trade and credit.⁵⁷ Some of the chief differences are the absence of actual or immediate delivery, or change of possession, the removal of notice, recordation or verification requirements, and the retention of title in the vendor.⁵⁸ By means of the trust receipt, title to goods passes directly from the manufacturer or seller to the banker or lender who, as owner, delivers the goods to the dealer in whose behalf he is acting secondarily, and to whom title goes ultimately when the primary right of the banker has been satisfied.⁵⁹

Similarly expressed

(1) "There are various forms of chattel security, as a pledge, conditional sale, or mortgage. But the trust receipt does not, on its face or by its name, purport to conform to any of these types. It is not a pledge, for a pledge depends upon possession of the parties secured, and, when possession is lost, so is the security. While the title in the case of a pledge is in the pledgor, or in another than the pledgee, such is not true in a trust receipt, where the title is intended to remain in the party secured while the possession is entrusted to one who has a certain interest as yet indefinite in the property. The practice of a conditional sale bears some resemblance to a trust receipt. Possession cannot be retaken until there is a default, whereas in a trust receipt, it can be retaken at any time. The holder of the trust receipt is not interested in the sale of the property or its commercial or market value. If he retakes the goods, and sells them for an amount in excess of the sum, this excess belongs to the buyer or importer; whereas, in a conditional sale, the buyer is interested only in such amount as he has paid on account of his contract. In any event, the holder of the trust receipt does not sell the goods to the importer or domestic trader, and whether or not the bank, finance company, or individual has an intention of selling goods to him, it lends him credit and advances the money for the buyer's account. In the case of a mortgage, whether of chattels or realty, the security is dependent upon the title, as distinguished from a pledge, which rests upon possession. Title is given to the person, while possession may be given to the mortgagor, or the debtor, or his representative. The title thus conveyed to the mortgagee is as security for the performance of his obligation, and, in the case of a trust receipt, title has never been in the importer or domestic buyer, and he consequently cannot convey such title back to the holder of the trust receipt. If the mortgagor conveys his title to the mortgagee as security for the performance of an obligation to a third person, the equity of redemption belongs to him, and not to the third person, and the property reverts to him upon performance of the obligation by the third person. In a trust receipt, under no circumstances does title revert to the manufacturer or seller."—In re James, Inc., C.C. A. N.Y., 30 F.2d 555, 557, 558.

(2) "While the security interest afforded by a trust receipt prior to the enactment of the uniform law was somewhat similar to many other forms of chattel security, it may be distinguished from such transactions as a mortgage, pledge or conditional sale. In the case of a mortgage, a lien is given by the mortgagor to the mortgagee in order to secure the latter for the performance of an obligation by the mortgagor who retains possession of the property. The trust receipt does not conform to a pledge, since in the case of a pledge the security depends upon possession of the goods by the person secured; whereas in the case of a trust receipt, the entruster does not have possession of the goods. In the case of a conditional sale, possession may not ordinarily be retaken until there is a default in the contract, whereas under a trust receipt transaction, possession may be retaken at any time. Other distinguishing features of these various types of security interest under the former law are clearly indicated in the case of In re James, Inc., 2 Cir., 30 F.2d 555"—C. I. T. Corporation v. Commercial Bank of Patterson, 149 P.2d 439, 442, 64 Cal. App.2d 722—Chichester v. Commercial Credit Co., 99 P.2d 1083, 1085, 37 Cal. App.2d 439.

(3) In a trust receipt transaction it was held that no element of a conditional sale or chattel mortgage was present, and consequently none of the requisites to the validity of such instruments was required.—In re E. Reboulin Pils & Co., D.C. N.J., 165 F. 245, 248.

May be a chattel mortgage

action is considered rather than the form, a trust receipt may be nothing but a chattel mortgage on a stock of merchandise daily exposed for sale in parcels at retail.—General Motors Acceptance Corporation v. Boddicker, Tex. Civ. App., 274 S.W. 1016, 1018.

Not chattel mortgage

(1) "Upon examination of the instrument in suit it seems plain enough that there was no obligation imposed on the sales company either to pay or to secure a purchase price, nor did any title pass to the sales company to support a chattel mortgage back."—Globe Securities Co. v. Gardner Motor Co., 85 S.W.2d 551, 557, 337 Mo. 177.

(2) "The decisions are not entirely in harmony as to the nature of trust receipts of the character involved in this proceeding, or their proper interpretation, whether they constitute conditional sales contracts, or, are, in their nature, chattel mortgages, or contracts of agency creating bailments. The holding in this state is that they are contracts creating bailments for sale and not in their nature chattel mortgages."—Commercial Credit Co. v. Interstate Securities Co., Mo. App., 197 S.W.2d 1000, 1001.

Close resemblance to conditional sale

The trust receipt transaction in its historic aspects and fundamental theory more nearly falls under the category of a conditional sale than a chattel mortgage.—Waller v. Commercial Credit Co., 299 N.W. 300, 302, 68 S.D. 151.

58. U.S.—In re Boswell, D.C. Cal., 20 F. Supp. 748, 751.

Superior protection to unrecorded chattel mortgage

It has been recognized that trust receipts should have superior protection as compared with an unrecorded chattel mortgage, when they are given to a lender of money by some one other than the debtor, and where either the delivery or possession against trust receipts is made to the debtor.—In re James, Inc., C.C. A. N.Y., 30 F.2d 555, 558.

59. U.S.—Hamilton Nat. Bank v. McCallum, C.C. A. Tenn., 58 F.2d 912, 913.—In re Chappell, D.C. Or., 77 F. Supp. 573, 575.

A trust receipt purports to vest and retain title in the holder of the receipt, and it is generally held that the rights incident to such title and ownership will be recognized not only as against the one giving the receipt, but his receiver, trustee in bankruptcy, and creditors generally, unless the contract is itself violative of local statute.⁶⁰

Trust receipts have generally been held not subject to recording or filing acts,⁶¹ the reason being that such statutes are to prevent secret liens on property of persons who have had prior possession and ownership of the property,⁶² and it is for the same reason that holders of trust receipts have been allowed to prevail against the ultimate purchaser or his trustee in bankruptcy only where the title of the holder was derived from some one other than the debtor.⁶³

There are two types of trust receipt transactions. The first is the tripartite, or the true or orthodox type, where the finance company advances the funds for the purchase of the chattel, purchases it and receives title to it from the manufacturer, and delivers possession to the dealer, who gives his trust receipt to the finance company.⁶⁴ The second type is the bipartite where the dealer has purchased and received title directly from the manufacturer and gives his receipt to the finance company.⁶⁵ In certain jurisdictions trust receipt transactions are governed by the Uniform Trust Receipts Act,⁶⁶ and one of the purposes of the Uniform Trust Receipts Act was to recognize and validate the second or bipartite type of trust receipt transaction.⁶⁷

Trust receipts as chattel mortgages are discussed at length in Chattel Mortgages § 9, and for other references see the index to that title. Trust receipts are also treated in Bankruptcy and for specific references see the index to that title. See also Banks and Banking § 179 and Sales § 574 b (4). For other references consult the Descriptive-Word Index.

Other phrases employing the word "trust" are set out in the note,⁶⁸ and for additional phrases of which more recent adjudications have not been found see 65 C.J. p 182 notes 16-20, 31-37.

TRUSTEE. The word "trustee" is defined both in its technical or legal sense, and in its broader and more general sense, in Trusts § 3.

60. U.S.—In re Bell Motor Co., C.C.A.Mo., 45 F.2d 19, 22.

Similarly expressed

Under the ordinary form of trust receipt, it is well settled that the title to the property is in the holder of the receipt, and not in the receptor; and the rights incident to such title and ownership will be enforced as against the one giving the receipt, his receiver, trustee in bankruptcy, and creditors generally. The courts in so holding are, in most instances, merely giving effect to the express provisions of the trust receipt, one of which commonly is that the goods are held as the property of the party to whom the receipt is given.—In re Otto-Johnson Mercantile Co., D.C.N.M., 52 F.2d 678, 680.

61. U.S.—Hamilton Nat. Bank v. McCallum, C.C.A.Tenn., 58 F.2d 912, 913.

Recording not required

The holder of a trust receipt, if he derives his security title from a person other than the one responsible for the satisfaction of the obligation which the property secures, is not obliged to file his security as is required in the case of a chattel mortgage. In such cases only can he deliver the property to the obligor to act as his fiduciary.—In re James, Inc., C.C.A.N.Y., 30 F.2d 555, 557.

Purpose of act

"The Uniform Trust Receipts Act is a perplexing maze of technical phrases wholly incomprehensible without an extensive study of the background and development of the security device known as the trust receipt. To avoid trespassing upon the traditional and well defined fields of such common security devices as the pledge, conditional sale and chattel mortgage, most of the act is devoted to definition, limitation and restriction of the arena in which the new device is to play its part in the world of commerce. The object of the Act is to standardize and protect the trust receipt method of financing the acquisition and resale of goods in their journey from producer to retailer"—In re Chappell, D.C.Or., 77 F.Supp. 573, 575.

(1) "Trust deed" defined see Mortgages § 5, and for other specific references see the index to that title.

(2) "Trust estate" is a term used with some confusion in the text-books, sometimes to express the estate of a trustee, and sometimes that of the beneficiary.—Cooper v. Cooper, 5 N.J.Eq. 9, 12.

(3) "Trust ex delicto" as a constructive trust see Trusts § 15.

(4) "Trust ex maleficio" as a constructive trust see Trusts § 15.

(5) "Trust fund doctrine" is the rule that the capital stock of a corporation constitutes a trust fund for the benefit of its creditors as its capital is the basis of its credit, but the trust does not arise until the corporation becomes insolvent, as stated in Corporations § 583.

(6) "Trust fund theory" is theory that charitable institution was created by donation for strictly charitable use and that to make its funds subject to damages for negligence of institution employees would be to deplete funds and thwart purpose of donors.—Haynes v. Presbyterian Hospital Ass'n, 45 N.W.2d 151, 153, 241 Iowa 1269. Liability of charitable institution for torts see Charities § 75.

(7) "Trust in invitum" as a constructive trust see Trusts § 15.

I. DEFINITIONS, HISTORY, KINDS, AND NATURE IN GENERAL

§ 1. Definitions and Distinctions

Definitions and distinctions with respect to terms coming within the scope of the title Trusts are considered infra §§ 2-7, 10-21.

Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 2. — Trust

In its technical legal sense, a trust is defined as the right, enforceable solely in equity, to the beneficial enjoyment of property the legal title to which is vested in another, but the word "trust" is frequently employed to indicate duties, relations, and responsibilities which are not strictly technical trusts.

In its technical legal sense a trust has been defined as the right, enforceable solely in equity, to the beneficial enjoyment of property the legal title to which is vested in another.¹ It has been otherwise defined as an obligation on a person arising out of a confidence reposed in him to apply property faithfully and according to such confidence;² a holding of property, subject to a duty of employing it or applying its proceeds according to directions given by the person from whom it was derived;³ or a right to property, real or personal, held by one party for the benefit of another.⁴ The term "trust" has also been defined as that relation between two persons by virtue of which one of them holds property for the benefit of the other,⁵ or as an equitable right, title, or interest in property, real or personal, distinct from the legal ownership thereof.⁶

"Confidence" or "use." It has been said that at common law no distinction was made between trusts and confidences and uses,⁷ and this rule has been applied in determining the operation of the statute of uses.⁸ It has even been said that a trust cannot be more accurately defined than in the terms employed by Lord Coke for the definition of a use.⁹

Broader usage. In a popular sense the word "trust" covers many things besides legal technical trusts,¹⁰ and, since the term is not of legal necessity, unvarying in meaning and measure, parties employing it may, by their express or implied agreement, give it such meaning or place such a limitation on its meaning as they may desire.¹¹ The word "trust" is frequently employed to indicate duties, relations, and responsibilities which are not strictly technical trusts¹² and it has been used as applicable to almost any case in which a confidence is reposed.¹³ However, that such usage is not strictly and technically accurate has been frequently recognized and pointed out,¹⁴ for properly speaking in order to give rise to a trust there must be something more than a confidence reposed by one person in another,¹⁵ since this element appears in perhaps a majority of the ordinary commercial transactions,¹⁶ and the conduct of public offices.¹⁷

Distinctions. Trusts have been distinguished from various other legal relationships,¹⁸ such as an agency, discussed in Agency § 2 k, an annuity, discussed in Annuities § 1, a bailment, discussed in Bailments § 4, or a charge.¹⁹ A distinction has also been drawn between a trust and a contract,²⁰ a gift inter vivos, discussed in Gifts § 8, a mortgage, dis-

(1) An "equitable charge" is like a "trust" in that in each case the legal title to property is vested in one person and an equitable interest is given to another, but equitable encumbrancer has only a security interest in the property, while beneficiary of a trust is, to the extent of his beneficial interest, the equitable owner of the trust property.—Woodley v. Woodley, 117 P.2d 722, 47 Cal. App.2d 188.

(2) An "equitable charge" on land and a "trust" are alike in that in both a person holds title subject to an equitable interest in another, but they differ in that holder of title to land subject to a charge has no fiduciary relationship to equitable encumbrancer and is the owner of land subject only to a lien in favor of the equitable encumbrancer and may convey his interest subject to the charge while in a trust there is a fiduciary relationship between trustee and beneficiary and trustee, although he has title, is not beneficial owner and cannot convey land unless expressly authorized by terms of trust.—Dial v. Dial, 38 N.E.2d 43, 378 Ill. 276.

(3) Generally, transfer which gives beneficial interest in property to transferee and mere security interest to third person creates an "equitable charge," while transfer which gives beneficial interest in property to third person and imposes on transferee duty to deal with property for benefit of such third person creates a "trust."—Anderson v. Anderson, 12 N. W.2d 571, 234 Iowa 277.

20. Divided ownership

In a "trust," as distinguished from "contract," there is always a divided ownership of property, to which trust-

cussed in Mortgages § 11, a partnership, discussed in Partnership § 1, a power, discussed in Powers § 1, a sale, of personality, discussed in Sales § 2, and a sale of lands creating the relationship of vendor and purchaser.²¹ A trust is distinguishable from a debt,²² in that a debt does not necessarily involve specific subject matter and that the debtor's obligations are legal and his relation not fiduciary, while the trustee's obligations are equitable and his relation fiduciary.²³ Further, a debt, in the technical sense, is money due or owing on account of a contract, expressed or implied, while a trust, strictly speaking, is an obligation arising out of a confidence reposed in a person to whom the legal title to property is conveyed on the condition that he will faithfully apply it according to the direction and risks of the vendor.²⁴

Analogous civil law terms. The term "fidei-commisum," in the civil law, refers to an arrangement resembling the "trust" of English equity.²⁵

"Fidei-comiso" is a disposition by which the donee, heir, or legatee is charged to preserve for, or return a thing to, a third person.²⁶

Other statement of distinction

(1) A "trust" differs from a "debt" in many respects, in that the beneficiary of a trust has the beneficial interest in the trust property, whereas a creditor has only a personal claim against the debtor, there is no fiduciary relationship between a debtor and a creditor, and trusts are enforced ordinarily in equity whereas creditors usually must sue at law.—Pure Oil Co. v. Byrnes, 57 N.E.2d 356, 358 Ill. 26.—Kilgore v. State Bank of Colusa, 25 N.E.2d 39, 372 Ill. 578

(2) In order to constitute a "trust," there must be a distinct fund which the trustee is required to preserve intact and for which he must eventually account, and, if there is no such fund but merely a general obligation ultimately to pay a sum of money, there is no trust but only a "debt"—Petition of Travers, 32 N.Y.2d 742, 117 Misc. 1014.

(3) The difference between a "trust" and a "debt," insofar as concerns the beneficiary and the creditor as the parties to whom are due performance of obligations arising out of the trust and debt respectively, lies chiefly in fact that beneficiary of trust has a beneficial interest in the trust property and the creditor has merely a personal claim against the debtor, but a debt is not a trust and involves no fiduciary relationship or duty.—Farmers State Bank of Fosston v. Sig Ellingson & Co., 16 N.W.2d 319, 218 Minn. 411.

(4) A "trust" is distinguished from a "debt" in that trust involves duty to deal as fiduciary with some specific property for benefit of another and debt involves merely personal obligation to make payment of a sum of money to another, and creditor has no legal or equitable interest in property of debtor, while beneficiary has equitable interest in trust property.—Broadus v. Gresham, 26 S.E.2d 33, 181 Va. 725.

Intention

Whether "debt" or "trust" is created by payment of money by one person to another depends on manifested intention of parties, and, if intention is that money shall be kept or used as separate fund for benefit of payor, or third person, "trust" is created, but, if intention is that person receiving money shall have unrestricted use thereof, being liable to pay similar amount with or without interest to payor or third person, "debt" is created

Duty to pay

(2) If testamentary disposition conveys the property in trust to one person to be by him delivered to another, the disposition is a "fidei commissum."—Succession of Hall, 75 So. 802, 141 La. 860

"Substitution" compared and distinguished

A "substitution" is a donation of property to a donee, who holds title in possession for life, without power of alienation, the property to be transmitted at his death to a second donee originally designated by donor, while a "fidei commissum" is created when property is given to one for the benefit of another, to vest in the latter at a given time or upon a stated condition.—*Breaux v. § 3. — Trustee

The term "trustee" as used in a technical or legal sense means the person who takes and holds the legal title to trust property for the benefit of another, but persons occupying confidential relationships which are not trusts in the technical sense are frequently denominated trustees in a broad and loose use of the term.

In a technical or legal sense a trustee has been variously defined as the person who takes and holds the legal title to the trust property for the benefit of another,²⁷ one to whom another's property is legally committed in trust;²⁸ or a person holding the legal title to property, under an express or implied agreement to apply it, and the income arising from it, to the use and for the benefit of another person, who is called the cestui que trust.²⁹ A trustee may also be defined as a person to whom property or funds have been committed in the belief or trust that he will hold and apply them for the benefit of those who are entitled according to an expressed intention either by the parties themselves or by the deed, will, settlement, or arrangement of another,³⁰ also by extension, a person held accountable as if he were expressly a trustee at law.³¹ A fiduciary acting in his representative capacity is a different person for juridical purposes from the same person in his individual capacity.³²

Broader usage. As in the case of the term "trust" the word "trustee" is not, of legal necessity, of unvarying meaning and measure,³³ and it is often used broadly and loosely,³⁴ and not in a strictly and technically accurate sense.³⁵ In a broad sense a trustee is defined to be a person in whom some estate, interest, or power in or affecting property of any description is vested for the benefit of another.³⁶ Persons occupying confidential relationships, which are not trusts in the technical sense, are frequently denominated trustees in a broad and loose use of the term.³⁷

Other relationships and obligations distinguished. The term "trustee" in its strict and technical sense is not properly applicable to a person occupying the position merely of an agent, discussed in Agency § 2 k, assignee, Assignments § 1 d, bailee, Bailments § 1, commissioner charged with the expenditure of a fund for a particular purpose,³⁸ committee of a lunatic,³⁹ or custodian.⁴⁰ A "trustee" is also to be

Quasi trustee. A quasi trustee is a person who reaps a benefit from a breach of trust, and so becomes answerable as a trustee.⁵⁵

Testamentary trustee. Trustee de son tort. He, who of his own authority enters into the possession, or assumes the management of property which belongs beneficially to another, is a trustee de son tort.⁵⁸

Trustee ex maleficio. A trustee ex maleficio is a person who, being guilty of wrongful or fraudulent conduct, is held by equity to the duty and liability of a trustee, in relation to the subject matter, to prevent him from profiting by his own wrong.⁵⁹

§ 7. — Gift in Trust

A gift in trust is one which passes equitable title to the donee but withholds the legal title.

A gift in trust is one which withholds the legal title from the donee although the equitable title passes.⁸⁹

§ 8. Origin and History of Trusts

The law of trusts has its origin in "uses" which were first introduced by the clergy for the purpose of evading the statutes of mortmain, and courts of equity continued to recognize and enforce such uses under the name of trusts after adoption of the statute of uses.

It has been generally assumed that trusts owed their origin to the fidei commissa of the Roman law,⁹⁰ which were supposed to have furnished the model or suggestion for the English uses,⁹¹ but it has also been held that the law of trusts as known in England and America has no exact counterpart in the Roman law and has none under the Spanish law.⁹² So under the civil law of some countries, the relation of trust, prevailing in the United States, is unknown.⁹³

Uses, it seems, were first introduced by the clergy for the purpose of evading the statutes of mortmain.⁹⁴ The system of uses was extended and applied to a variety of other purposes and transactions, and gave rise to many inconveniences, evils, and abuses, to remedy which the statute of uses was finally enacted, the general intent of which was to transfer the use into possession and make the cestui que use the complete owner at law as well as in equity.⁹⁵ Under the construction subsequently put on this statute by the courts, there were, however, several kinds of uses which were not within its application and therefore not executed by it,⁹⁶ and these the courts of equity continued to recognize and enforce under the name of trusts;⁹⁷ so that a trust became practically what a use was before the statute of uses,⁹⁸ or a use not executed by the statute.⁹⁹ In any event, a trust is regarded as a creature of equity.¹

§ 9. Nature, Elements, and Purpose of Trusts in General

In its simplest elements a trust is a confidence reposed in one person, called the trustee, for the benefit of another, called the cestui que trust, with respect to property held by the former for the benefit of the latter; and it is fundamentally essential to the existence of any trust that there be a trust res or subject matter and that there be a separation of the legal estate from the beneficial enjoyment.

is created in judicial intendment, to exist until these interests are completely reunited.¹¹

Although a trust is not considered a contractual relation¹² it may arise out of a contract¹³ and it may arise by implication no less than by express words.¹⁴ So a trust relation may grow out of express contract or result from facts and circumstances independent of contract,¹⁵ or, as otherwise expressed, a trust may arise by agreement or intention, or, without either, the circumstances may be such that a trust will arise by implication or operation of law.¹⁶ On the other hand, a trust can arise only from an agreement, express or implied, or by operation of law,¹⁷ and equity cannot create a trust where the parties did not intend to do so, and where none arose by operation of law.¹⁸ Express trusts and trusts implied from the language of the instrument must possess inherently the legal specifications which will enable a court to decree its administration in accordance with the wishes of the settlor, who alone has power to assent to it and to declare it.¹⁹ A trust cannot be upheld unless it is of such a nature that the beneficiary is capable of enforcing its execution by a proceeding in chancery.²⁰

The legal and equitable obligations of a fiduciary result from the real nature of the relationship between the parties and not merely from the literal wording of their contract.²¹ Trusts are always imperative and are obligatory on the conscience of the person intrusted,²² they are made with strict reference to their faithful execution,²³ and it has been said that the entire doctrine of trusts rests on the principle that equity regards that as done which should be done.²⁴ Since the primary object of a trust is to confine the powers of the beneficiary and to deprive him of any power to dispose of and manage the trust,²⁵ it has been the policy of the courts vigorously to protect trust estates and to resist any attempts to defeat the will of a testator or to allow improvident beneficiaries to obtain their estates outright,²⁶ especially where rights of infant remaindermen are involved.²⁷ It has been said that a trust is usually created to preserve property intact and to earn income for the beneficiary,²⁸ and ordinarily the trustee is directed to administer the fund in order to substitute his supposedly superior judgment for that of the beneficiary.²⁹

Division of estate

A "trust" arises on division of estate into legal and equitable parts.—Henshaw v. Texas Natural Resources Foundation, Civ App., 212 S.W.2d 241, reversed on other grounds 216 S.W.2d 566, 147 Tex. 436.

§ 10. Kinds and Classes of Trusts in General

Trusts, with respect to the manner of their creation, are divided primarily into two classes, express and implied; and implied trusts are subdivided into the two classes, resulting and constructive.

Trusts with respect to the manner of their creation are divided primarily into two classes, express and implied,³⁰ or, as it is sometimes stated, trusts are either express or they arise by operation of law,³¹ or are voluntary or involuntary, as discussed infra § 18. Express trusts are further classified into active, alive or operative trusts³² and passive, simple, nominal or dry trusts,³³ and into executed or complete and executory or incomplete trusts, discussed infra § 16.

As ordinarily classified and defined implied trusts are subdivided into the two classes, resulting and constructive;³⁴ but by some authorities the term "implied trust" is used in a sense exclusive of these two classes,³⁵ and by others the term is used interchangeably with "resulting trust."³⁶

These different classifications have led to some variance and confusion with respect to terms,³⁷ but in so far as the decision of particular cases is concerned it is of no practical importance what system of classification or subdivision is adopted.³⁸ As a matter of administration, courts are not concerned with formal classifications of trust made by text writers for convenience in treating the subject, as long as emphasis is permitted to remain on the factual situations out of which the trust arises or on which it may be declared.³⁹

§ 11. — Express Trusts

Express trusts are those which are created by the direct and positive acts of the parties, by some writing, or deed, or will, or by words either expressly or impliedly evincing an intention to create a trust.

trust.⁴¹ Express trusts are also sometimes called "direct,"⁴² "declared,"⁴³ or "conventional"⁴⁴ trusts.

A "power in trust" involves a form of express fiduciary obligation similar to that of an express trust.⁴⁵

Constructive and resulting trusts distinguished. An express trust is to be distinguished from a constructive trust.⁴⁶ They are distinct concepts.⁴⁷ A constructive trust differs from an express trust in much the same way as a quasi contractual obligation differs from a contractual obligation.⁴⁸

An express trust springs from the agreement of the parties, while a constructive trust arises from the construction of equity, in order to satisfy the demands of justice.⁴⁹ Also, a constructive trust, unlike an express trust, is remedial in character.⁵⁰ A constructive trust, unlike an express trust, is not a fiduciary relation, although the circumstances which give rise to a constructive trust may or may not involve a fiduciary relation.⁵¹ They are similar

Remedial institution

A "constructive trust" is a remedial institution as distinguished from substantive, the latter being typically exemplified by an "express trust".

only in that in both one person holds title to property subject to an equitable duty to hold the property for, or to convey it to, another, and the latter has in each case some kind of an equitable interest in the property.⁵²

An express trust has also been distinguished from a resulting trust.⁵³ So it has been held that a resulting trust differs from an express trust in the manner of its creation and in the nature and extent of the duties of the trustee;⁵⁴ but it has also been held that these trusts differ only in the manner in which they are proved; when proved a resulting trust is enforced in the same manner as an express trust.⁵⁵

Implied trust distinguished. Express and implied trusts differ chiefly in that express trusts are created by the acts of the parties,⁵⁶ while implied trusts are raised by operation of law,⁵⁷ either to carry out a presumed intention of the parties or to satisfy the demands of justice or protect against fraud.⁵⁸

§ 12. — Implied Express Trusts or Incompletely Expressed Trusts

The term "implied trust" sometimes refers to a form of express trust arising from the construction of the language used by the trustor, and in this sense is defined as a trust that the courts imply from the words of an instrument, where no express trust is declared.

The term "implied trust" is sometimes used to designate a form of express trusts arising from the construction of the language used by the trustor.⁵⁹ In this sense implied trusts are defined as trusts that the courts imply from the words of an instrument, where no express trust is declared, but such words are used that the court infers or implies that it was the purpose or intention of the parties to create a trust.⁶⁰ Such a trust may arise where precatory words in the document require interpretation, but cannot arise where the express terms are unambiguous.⁶¹

§ 13. — Implied Trusts

Implied trusts are those which, without being expressed, are deducible from the nature of the transaction as matters of intent, or which are superinduced on the transaction by operation of law as matters of equity, independently of the particular intention of the parties.

infra § 98. It has been held that a resulting trust is not a "trust" strictly speaking, but equity imposes a trust relationship because morality, justice, conscience, and fair dealing demand that the relation be established.⁷²

Constructive trust distinguished. Resulting and constructive trusts, while frequently confused, are clearly distinguishable.⁷³ A resulting trust is a status that automatically arises by operation of law out of certain circumstances, while a constructive trust is a remedy that equity applies in order to prevent injustice or in order to do justice.⁷⁴ In the case of a resulting trust there is always the element, although it is an implied one, of an intention to create a trust,⁷⁵ by reason of which, although it is by no means an express trust, it approaches more nearly thereto.⁷⁶ Constructive trusts on the other hand have none of the elements of an express trust,⁷⁷ but arise entirely by operation of law without reference to any actual or supposed intention of creating a trust, and often directly contrary to such intention, for the purpose of working out right and justice or frustrating fraud.⁷⁸ Constructive trusts embrace a much larger class of cases than resulting trusts.⁷⁹

§ 15. — Constructive Trusts

The term "constructive trust" is broadly defined as a trust raised by construction of law, or arising by operation of law, as distinguished from an express trust; but in a more restricted sense and contradistinguished from a resulting trust, it is defined as a trust not created by any words, either expressly or impliedly evincing a direct intention to create a trust, but by the construction of equity in order to satisfy the demands of justice.

§ 15. — Executed and Executory, or Complete and Incomplete Trusts

An executed trust is one in which the limitations and trusts are fully and perfectly declared, while an executory trust is one in which the limitations are imperfectly declared, and the donor's intention is expressed in such general terms that something not fully declared is required to be done, in order to complete and perfect the trust, and give it effect.

Trusts are classified as executed and executory,⁹⁶ and the distinction between the two classes has been long recognized,⁹⁷ although it is not always easy of application.⁹⁸ In one sense of the word all trusts may be said to be executory,⁹⁹ because there is always something to be done,¹ but this is not the sense in which the terms "executed" and "executory" are properly used with respect to trusts;² nor has the classification any reference to the effect of the statute of uses.³ An executed trust is one in which the limitations and trusts are fully and perfectly declared.⁴ An executory trust is one in which the limitations are imperfectly declared, and the donor's intention is expressed in such general terms that something not fully declared is required to be done, in order to complete and perfect the trust, and give it effect.⁵

The distinction between executed and executory trusts properly so called, therefore, depends on the manner in which the trusts are declared,⁶ and the terms "executed" and "executory" refer rather to the manner and perfection of their creation than to the action of the trustee in administering the property.⁷ The distinction between executed and executory trusts as thus defined and distinguished is recognized by the decided weight of authority.⁸ However, in some decisions the term "executory" seems to be used rather in the sense of something remaining to be done, that is, some duty to be performed by the trustee.⁹

The terms "complete" and "incomplete" as applied to trusts have reference to the manner and perfection of their creation rather than to the action of the trustee in administering the property.¹⁰ A complete trust is defined as one in which the estates and interests in the subject matter of the trust are completely limited and defined by the instrument creating the trust and require no further instruments to complete them.¹¹

§ 17. — Simple and Special, Passive and Active, Technical and Operative Trusts

A simple, passive, technical, dry, or naked trust is one in which the trustee is a mere passive depositary of the property, with no active duties to perform, while a special, active, or operative trust is one in which either from the express directions of the language creating the trust, or from the very nature of the trust itself, the trustee is charged with the performance of active, and substantial duties with respect to the control, management, and disposition of the trust property for the benefit of the cestui que trust.

Trusts are also classified as "simple" and "special,"¹² "passive" and "active,"¹³ or "technical" and "operative."¹⁴ A simple, passive, technical, dry, or naked trust, as a trust of this nature has been variously denominated,¹⁵ is one in which the trustee is a mere passive depositary of the property, with no active duties to perform.¹⁶ On the other hand,

Tests

(1) The test as to whether a trust is an "executory trust" is to determine whether settlor has acted as his own conveyancer and defines precisely the settlement to be made, and, if he has, the word "heirs" is one of limitation, and if he has not, the trust is executory, and the word "heirs" is a word of purchase, and the persons coming within such definition have an interest in the property.—Sutliff v. Aydelott, 27 N.E.2d 529, 373 Ill. 633.

(2) One of the tests to determine whether a settlor of a trust has acted as his own conveyancer is to ascertain whether the trust instrument purports to pass title directly to the beneficiaries, or whether the instrument requires a trustee to make the conveyance.—Sutliff v. Aydelott, supra.

special, active, or operative trusts, as trusts of this kind have been designated,¹⁷ are those in which either from the express directions of the language creating the trust, or from the very nature of the trust itself, the trustees are charged with the performance of active and substantial duties with respect to the control, management, and disposition of the trust property for the benefit of the cestui que trust.¹⁸ As disclosed by the above definitions these classes of trusts are in theory clearly distinguishable¹⁹ and the distinction has been said to be well settled,²⁰ although it has also been said that in its application to particular cases it is sometimes not very obvious.²¹

An express active trust is one in which, from the express directions of the language creating the trust or from the very nature of the trust itself, the trustee is charged with the performance of active and substantial duties with respect to the control, management, and disposition of the trust property for the benefit of the cestui que trust.²²

An "express private passive trust" has been defined as existing where land is conveyed to or held by one person in trust for another, without any power being expressly or impliedly given trustee to take actual possession of land or exercise acts of ownership over it, except by beneficiary's direction, and only naked legal title is vested in trustee, while beneficiary's equitable estate is to all intents beneficial ownership, virtually equivalent in equity to corresponding legal estate.—*Elvins v. § 18. — Voluntary and Involuntary Trusts

Trusts have been classified as voluntary and involuntary, and under this classification voluntary trusts are express trusts, and involuntary trusts are implied or constructive trusts.

In some states trusts are divided into voluntary and involuntary trusts²³ and under this classification voluntary trusts are express trusts, and involuntary trusts are implied or constructive trusts.²⁴ A voluntary trust is defined as an obligation arising out of a personal confidence reposed in, and voluntarily accepted by, one for the benefit of another.²⁵ An involuntary trust is one which is created by operation of law.²⁶

A complete voluntary trust is one which has been completely created, that is, the subject matter has been designated, the trustee and beneficiary have been named, and the limitations and trusts are fully and perfectly declared.²⁷

A voluntary executed trust is an express trust arising out of a personal confidence reposing in, and

§ 19. — Public and Private Trusts

Trusts are classified as public and private, and under such classification a private trust is one wherein the beneficial interest is vested absolutely in one or more individuals, who are or may be within a certain time distinctly ascertained.

Since they may be created for either public or private purposes,²⁹ trusts may be classified as public and private.³⁰ A public, or as it is frequently called, a charitable trust is one constituted for the benefit either of the public at large or some particular portion of it answering to a particular description, as discussed in Charities § 1. A private trust is one wherein the beneficial interest is vested absolutely in one or more individuals, who are or may be within a certain time distinctly ascertained.³¹

§ 20. — Legal and Illegal Trusts

Trusts have been classified as legal and illegal.

Some authorities classify trusts as legal and illegal.³² Trusts are legal when they are for some honest purpose, such as to pay debts or make a provision for families.³³ They are illegal when they are for purposes of immorality, or vice, or of defrauding creditors, or contravene some statute, or are contrary to public policy.³⁴

§ 21. — Other Kinds and Classes of Trusts

A conventional trust is a trust created by decree of the court; a parol trust is a right to property created without writing by one person for the benefit of another; and a spendthrift trust is a trust created to provide a fund for the maintenance of the beneficiary, and at the same time to secure it against his improvidence or incapacity.

The courts and law lexicographers have defined many terms descriptive of kinds and classes of trusts other than those heretofore considered.³⁵ Trusts defined and discussed elsewhere are "Massachusetts trusts," discussed in Business Trusts § 1, savings bank trusts, discussed infra § 54, testamentary trusts, discussed in the C.J.S. title Wills §§ 1004-1061, also 69 C.J. p 692 note 49-p 823 note 27, voting trusts, discussed in Corporations § 552, and trusts ex maleficio, trusts ex delicto, and trusts in invitum, discussed supra § 15.

Annuity trust and common trust. Provision of a fixed amount of income regardless of the amount of principal is a distinguishing feature of an "annuity trust," while in a "common trust" the amount of the principal is fixed regardless of the income as long as the income is reasonable.³⁶

Contingent trust. An express trust may depend for its operation on a future event, and is then a contingent trust.³⁷

Conventional trust. A trust created by decree of the court.³⁸

Importance of distinction.

Illusory trust and ostensible trust.

(1) An "illusory trust" is predicated on a fraud of marital rights and connotes a trust made inter vivos and designed to circumvent a surviving spouse from receiving such interest in estate of deceased spouse as he or she might rightfully expect under law had deceased spouse died with title to property conveyed by the trust instrument, and it has all attributes in form and substance of conveyance in trust designed to defraud creditors, including transfer of title to third persons as trustees.—Windle v. Flinn, 251 P.2d 136, 147, 195 Or. 654.

Discretionary trust. A discretionary trust is one where by the terms of the trust no direction is given as to the manner in which the trust fund shall be vested till the time arrives at which it is to be apportioned in satisfaction of the trust.⁴⁰

Donative trust. A "donative trust" is a trust not requiring payment of any consideration by the beneficiary.⁴¹ Such a trust may be created by transfer of property in trust as a gift for the benefit of another person or by proper declaration of the legal owner of property that he will hold it in trust for another's benefit.⁴² Where such a trust is created, the law of trusts is superimposed on the law of gifts or the law of wills.⁴³

Enforceable trust. A trust in which some person or class of persons have a right to all or a part of a designated fund, and can demand its conveyance to them.⁴⁴

General trust. A transfer by a person of all his property to a trustee to hold as a trust fund.⁴⁵

Ministerial trust. A trust which demands no further exercise of reason or understanding than every intelligent agent must necessarily employ;

also called "instrumental trust." It is a species of special trust, distinguished from a discretionary trust, which necessarily require much exercise of the understanding.⁴⁶

Parol trust. A right to property created without writing by one person for the benefit of another.⁴⁷ Sometimes the term is applied to trusts which do not come within the statute of frauds and may be proved by parol.⁴⁸ In this sense resulting trusts are known as parol trusts.⁴⁹

Precatory trust. A trust created by certain words which are more like words of entreaty and permission than of command or certainty.⁵⁰

Secret trust. Where a testator gives property to a person, on a verbal promise by the legatee or devisee that he will hold it in trust for another person, this is called a secret trust.⁵¹

Shifting trust. An express trust which is so settled that it may operate in favor of beneficiaries additional to, or substituted for, those first named, on specified contingencies.⁵²

Spendthrift trust. A trust created to provide a fund for the maintenance of the beneficiary, and at the same time to secure it against his improvidence or incapacity.⁵³ A spendthrift trust, therefore, is an active trust,⁵⁴ clearly distinguishable from other

Interest "in praesenti"

In order for owner of property to make himself trustee for benefit of another, it is necessary that owner use words or do acts clearly denoting

tec⁶⁹ for the benefit of a cestui que trust or purpose to which the trust fund is to be applied;⁷⁰ or a retention of title by the owner under circumstances which clearly and unequivocally disclose an intent to hold for the use of another, as considered infra § 50. The terms of the trust must be sufficiently declared, as discussed infra § 42. Considered from the standpoint of parties, an express trust implies a coöperation of three persons: A settlor, or a person who creates or establishes a trust; a trustee, or person who takes and holds the legal title to the trust property for the benefit of another; and a cestui que trust or person for whose benefit the trust is created.⁷¹

Spendthrift trusts. In order to constitute a valid spendthrift trust, there must be an intention to create such a trust;⁷² the interest of the donee cannot exceed an equitable life estate in the income of the property,⁷³ without title or right to the possession of the property itself,⁷⁴ securing it against the beneficiary's improvidence or incapacity;⁷⁵ the legal title must be vested in a trustee,⁷⁶ who may be authorized or directed at his discretion,⁷⁷ or on the happening of certain events,⁷⁸ to pay money or deliver benefits to the beneficiary;⁷⁹ and the trust must be an active one.⁸⁰ The beneficiary must not possess power to destroy the trust and acquire full power of alienation,⁸¹ and it has been held that the intention to relinquish his beneficial interest in the property "in praesenti" and to hold it for benefit of another, that there be specific property to be held in trust, and an absolute parting by alleged trustor with beneficial interest which was his up to the declaration of trust—*Fritz v. trust deed must contain a provision against alienation or anticipation of income.⁸² It is not necessary that the beneficiary be a spendthrift,⁸³ or that there be a gift over on the termination of the trust.⁸⁴ The court will not inquire into the reason or wisdom of creating a spendthrift trust; it will assume that it is sufficient.⁸⁵ It has been held that the validity of a spendthrift trust depends on the sufficiency and legality of the expressed purposes of the trustor and not on the trustor's reasons for creating the trusts.⁸⁶

Rule criticized

"When, finally, it is observed that the policy [of spendthrift trusts] is indifferent to any distinction between beneficiaries who are and are not spendthrifts in fact, thus infolding within its arms those needing none of its favor from any standpoint of protection, it is entitled to even less respect. The policy in practice and as developed is thrown aside in complete disregard of its proper limits of application. The argument that any one may become a spendthrift and thus warrant his treatment as having already become one is too strained for acceptance."—Brahmey v. Rollins, 179 A. 186, 194, 87 N.H. 290.

Where the legal title to property is already held by one person for the benefit of another, the power to declare a further trust resides in the beneficial owner.⁹¹

b. Trustee

While a trustee is essential to a trust, as considered supra § 22, equity will not permit a trust, otherwise perfectly declared, to fail for want of a trustee, as discussed infra § 211, but will, in case of a vacancy, either appoint a trustee, as discussed infra § 217, or assume the administration and execution of the trust itself, as considered infra § 262.

c. Cestui Que Trust

The cestui que trust must be a person or legal entity, distinct from the trustee, but it is not necessary that the cestui que be in existence at the time of the creation of the trust.

It is essential to a private trust that there be a cestui que trust or beneficiary, as discussed supra

§ 22, which must be a person or legal entity,⁹² distinct from the trustee, as considered infra § 210; but it is not necessary that the cestui que trust be in existence at the time of the creation of the trust, and it is sufficient if it comes into being during the life of the trustee.⁹³ It is not necessary that the beneficiary be named if he is so described that he is capable of being identified and distinguished from every other human being.⁹⁴ It is the general rule, with some exceptions,⁹⁵ that persons who have no right to acquire and hold property cannot become beneficiaries and acquire the beneficial interest in property through the medium of a trust.⁹⁶

It has been held that a trust may be created for the benefit of minors,⁹⁷ heirs at law,⁹⁸ the settlor's wife and children,⁹⁹ the trustee's wife and children,¹ a school,² an unincorporated joint stock company,³ and the residents of an unincorporated village.⁴ Except where the rights of creditors are concerned,⁵ a trust may be created for the benefit of the settlor during his life, with remainder to other persons,⁶

Class

(1) Members of a definite class of persons or members of a class who can readily be identified may properly be made the beneficiaries of a trust, or a trust may be created for the benefit of a class of persons, although, by the terms of the trust, the trustee is authorized to select which of the members shall take in what proportions.—*Edgerton v. Change in substance

When grantor makes himself a beneficiary of a trust of his own creation, the law must be astute to see whether substance as well as appearance of things has been changed and takes note of the status quo ante of the trust, and if it finds that, aft-

although trusts for the sole use and benefit of the settlor are expressly or impliedly prohibited by some statutes.⁷ The beneficiary may enhance the corpus of the estate by voluntary contribution.⁸

Extent of interest. The extent of the interest of the beneficiary of a trust need not be definite at the time of the creation of the trust if it is definitely ascertainable within the period of the rule against perpetuities.⁹ The time of vesting of express trusts is considered infra § 29.

Statutory limitation of trusts to beneficiaries not sui juris. In some jurisdictions there are certain restrictions on the right of a person to create a trust for a person sui juris, which are unknown to the common law.¹⁰ Under a statute providing that trust estates may be created for the benefit of any minor, or person non compos mentis, or any male person of age, whenever in fact such person is, because of mental weakness, intemperate habits, or wasteful and profligate habits, unfit to be intrusted with the right and management of property, it has been held that a trust estate cannot be created for the benefit of one sui juris,¹¹ who has no wasteful, intemperate, or profligate habits;¹² that a person cannot, by deed, create out of his own property, on his own behalf, a trust estate;¹³ but a trust may be created for minors although there are no active duties to be discharged by the trustee.¹⁴ A valid trust may, however, under certain circumstances, be created for the benefit of one sui juris.¹⁵ Such a statute does not prevent the creation of a trust for the benefit of a person sui juris, for life, with a limitation in trust to another person sui juris;¹⁶ but the mere fact that there is a legal remainder over will not suffice to uphold a trust for one sui juris.¹⁷ A valid trust may be created in favor of a minor, not only where the trustee takes the legal title for him in fee simple, but where the trustee takes it in trust for a life tenant who is sui juris, with remainder over in fee to the minor,¹⁸ and in such a case the trust embraces both estates, and the trustee is empowered to act and manage the property for both.¹⁹

Trust for benefit of two persons. There may be a single beneficiary, or several beneficiaries of a trust.²⁰ It has been held, however, that there can be no trust in property for the common benefit of two persons where one of them has power at any time to destroy the trust by disposing of the property.²¹

Use on bargain and sale. It has been held that a use upon a bargain and sale cannot be limited to or creation of trust, grantor still is the one who has the primary right to enjoy fruits of ownership, it may disregard change in legal title in order to prevent some policy of the law from being nullified by a legal device.—Kent v. U. S., 60 F.Supp. 203, 103 Ct.Cl. 714.

British statute held inapplicable

British statute, declaring deeds of gifts in trust to use of persons making them void, was inapplicable to trust deed directing payment of income to settlor during her life and principal to her testamentary appointees, surviving issue, or next of kin.—Mercantile Trust Co. of Baltimore v. Bergdorf & Goodman Co., 173 A. 31, 167 Md. 158, 93 A.L.R. 1205.

In California

(1) Under Civil Code § 857, which has been repealed, a trust to hold rents and profits to the sole use of the settlor was held not to be within the uses authorized.—Carpenter v. Cook, 54 P. 997, 132 Cal. 621, 84 Am. S.R. 118.

(2) Under later decisions trusts created for the benefit of the settlor have been held valid.

held to exist in money,³¹ promissory notes,³² a deposit in a bank,³³ future earnings,³⁴ leaseholds,³⁵ a growing crop,³⁶ slaves,³⁷ an interest in a patent,³⁸ and an undivided interest in property.³⁹

In order that a trust may attach, there must be something tangible to which it can attach.⁴⁰ For example, an idea, which is not patented, is not property which can be impressed with a trust.⁴¹ An obligor has no such interest in his own obligation as can be held in trust,⁴² and a person cannot have a legal claim against himself whether for his own benefit or for the benefit of another.⁴³ A privilege personal in character cannot be the subject of a trust.⁴⁴ It has been held, however, that a declaration of trust of property executed before the acquisition of the property, but which is subsequently acquired, does not fail for want of the requisite subject matter,⁴⁵ but that the instrument takes full effect when the subsequent title vests in the decedent.⁴⁶

§ 25. Purposes

Subject to statutory requirements and the public policy of the state, an active express trust may be created for any lawful purpose.

Except as to a purpose foreign to the public policy of the state,⁴⁷ or within the meaning of a statutory prohibition, the policy of the law to permit a man to make whatever disposition of his property he sees fit allows him to create an active express trust for any lawful⁴⁸ purpose he deems wise and expedient,⁴⁹ whether or not the cestui que trust is sui juris.⁵⁰

Thus, trusts are valid where they are created for the purpose of satisfying charges and encumbrances out of rents and profits;⁵¹ of applying the income, and principal, if necessary, for the benefit of a beneficiary;⁵² of payment of creditors out of funds deposited;⁵³ of selling realty to pay creditors;⁵⁴ of preserving a future estate;⁵⁵ of educating grandchildren of testator;⁵⁶ of paying over to a beneficiary who should use it for any purpose he deems best for his minor son;⁵⁷ of conserving property pending exercise of a power of appointment after a life estate;⁵⁸ of paying annuities;⁵⁹ of supporting the settlor during the remainder of his life;⁶⁰ of protecting the trust property from the control of the beneficiary's husband;⁶¹ or his creditors;⁶² and of keeping up a grave or burial lot.⁶³

On the other hand, some useful purpose must be served by trust, and a mere dry trust is invalid.⁶⁴ When a statute regulating trusts is applicable only to realty, trusts in personalty may be created for any purpose not unlawful,⁶⁵ and a trust is one of personalty, within the meaning of the rule, when the trust instrument manifestly contemplates the conversion of realty into personalty.⁶⁶ Where property is given for a prescribed purpose, its use otherwise is avoided.⁶⁷

Statutory limitation or authorization. Some statutes regulating uses and trusts have manifested an intention to abolish all uses and trusts except such as are expressly permitted by statute. It follows that, under such a statute, a trust for a purpose not within those enumerated by statute is invalid,⁶⁸ and it has been held that there must be something to indicate that the settlor contemplated one of the classes of trusts enumerated by the statute.⁶⁹ Some statutes are intended to abolish passive trusts by prohibiting, either expressly or by elimination, trusts wherein the right both to possession and profits vests in the beneficiary.⁷⁰ Under some statutes trusts may be created for the purpose of conveying merely;⁷¹ or for a variety of other purposes such as that of paying the settlor's debts;⁷² of maintaining a kindergarten for children;⁷³ of selling real property for the benefit of creditors;⁷⁴ annuitants;⁷⁵ or legatees;⁷⁶ and of improving a stream and mill privilege.⁷⁷ Under a statute providing that a valid trust may be created for the purpose of selling realty and dividing the proceeds thereof among the legatees, it is essential that the purpose to sell be the primary object of the trust,⁷⁸ and that the duty to sell be imperative.⁷⁹

Many trusts derive their validity from statutory provisions authorizing the creation of trusts for the purpose of receiving the rents and profits of real property, and applying them to the use of a person, during his life or for a shorter period.⁸⁰ Under such a statute it is not necessary, in order to create a valid trust that the statutory words "to receive the rents" be used, it being sufficient if the power to collect rents is clearly imputed from an express and undisputed power to rent and divide the proceeds among designated beneficiaries.⁸¹ A direction to pay over the rents and profits of land to a beneficiary is a direction to apply them to the use of a person within the meaning of the statute.⁸² Where a trust depends for its validity on such a statute, the provisions of the trust instrument must come within the terms of the statute.⁸³ For example, the rents and profits must be applied to the use of some person.⁸⁴ The power to rent must not be merely incidental to the trust.⁸⁵ The validity of the purpose for which the trust is created will be governed by the statute in effect at the time the trust is created.⁸⁶

Two purposes. A deed combining the two characters of a deed of trust to secure creditors, and a deed of settlement in trust for a wife and children, may take effect in both characters.⁸⁷

§ 25. — Spendthrift Trusts

Spendthrift trusts, that is, trusts intended to secure the trust fund against the improvidence of the cestui que trust by protecting it against his creditors and rendering it inalienable by him before payment, have generally been upheld as valid.

Although at common law and under some statutes the rule is to the contrary,⁸⁸ spendthrift trusts, that is, trusts intended to secure the trust fund against the improvidence of the cestui que trust by protecting it against his creditors and rendering it inalienable by him before payment, have generally been upheld as valid,⁸⁹ not out of any consideration for

Statutory right of creditors

(1) Settlor cannot provide that beneficiary's creditors cannot reach rights of beneficiary in trust where statute permits creditors to reach rights of beneficiary in trust.—Brahmeyer v. Rollins, 179 A. 186, 87 N.H. 290.

(2) Interest of beneficiary in trust property is or is not subject to seizure according to statutory authorization, and settlor cannot relieve beneficiary's interest in property from seizure by beneficiary's creditors, if authorized by statute, by assertion that beneficiary's interest is exempt from such seizure.—Brahmeyer v.  Elements and requisites of spendthrift trusts see supra § 22.
 "Spendthrift trust" defined see supra § 21.
Corpus of estate
 A valid spendthrift trust may be created as to the corpus as well as income of trust estate—Hitchens v. Safe Deposit & Trust Co. of Baltimore, 66 A.2d 93, 193 Md. 53—Medwedoff v. Fisher, 17 A.2d 141, 179 Md. 192, 138 A.L.R. 1313.
Gift
 Spendthrift trust statute authorizing restraints on alienation of beneficial interests was designed for trusts in which a gift is involved—Tracey v. Franklin, 67 A.2d 56, 81 Del.Ch. 477, 11 A.L.R.2d 990.
Married woman
 A spendthrift trust may be created for benefit of a married woman.—In re De Lano's Estate, 145 P.2d 672, 62 Cal.App.2d 808.
Property right
 Right to create a spendthrift trust is a property right entitled to the full protection of the law.—In re Harrison's Estate, 185 A. 766, 322 Pa. 532.
Public policy
 (1) Public policy is the determining factor whether restraint on alienation involved in a spendthrift trust is upheld by statute or judicial decision.—Mercantile Trust Co. v. Hoferbert, D.C.Md., 58 F.Supp. 701.
 (2) In determining validity of trust annuity which by its terms was not subject to seizure by annuitant's creditors, established legal principles would be followed unless persistent public policy demanded departure therefrom.—Brahmey v. Rollins, 179 A. 186, 87 N.H. 290.
Alienation or anticipation
 (1) The intention of founder of a spendthrift trust, if it can be ascertained, and if it is not contrary to public policy or forbidden by law, must be regarded by the court as the measure by which validity of an attempted alienation or anticipation shall be determined.—Moore v. Moore, 44 A.2d 639, 137 N.J. Eq. 314.
 (2) In a spendthrift trust, validity of the restriction upon alienation or anticipation will not be judged by propriety of the purposes served by an attempted alienation or anticipation.—Moore v. Moore, supra.
In Missouri
 (1) The rule of the text has been applied.—Mullin v. Trolinger, 179 S.W.2d 484, 237 Mo. App. 939—Brumbaugh v. Young, 144 S.W.2d 823, 235 Mo. App. 643—Gentemann v. Dyer, App., 140 S.W.2d 75.

(2) The Missouri statute declaring spendthrift trusts void as against the claims of any wife or children of cestui que trust for support and maintenance or as against claim of wife for alimony, applied to foreign decree for divorce and alimony—Howard v. Jennings, C.C.A. Mo., 146 F.2d 332.
In Pennsylvania
 (1) The rule as stated in the text has been applied.
 Cal.—Kelly v. Kelly, 79 P.2d 1059, 11 Cal.2d 356, 119 A.L.R. 71, applying Pennsylvania law.

Flint, 5 A.2d 126, 333 Pa. 350, 121 A.L.R. 1022—In re Harrison's Estate, 185 A. 766, 322 Pa. 532—In re Lafferly's Estate, 167 A. 44, 311 Pa. 455—Rehr v.  (2) A spendthrift trust is a favorite of the law, the donor having an individual right of property in the execution of the trust and the right to protect his beneficiaries from a presumed incapacity to manage the property; any attempt to vary the purposes of the trust or to divert principal or income to other than the declared purposes is to be steadfastly resisted, the primary consideration being the estate of the donor and the interests of the beneficiary being secondary.—In re Heyl's Estate, 50 Pa. Dist. & Co. 357, affirmed 40 A.2d 149, 156 Pa. Super. 277, affirmed 43 Pa. 352, 352 Pa. 407—65 C.J. p. 239 note 99 [d] (1), (2).
 (3) As to claims for maintenance and support of deserted and neglected wives, not divorced, spendthrift trusts are invalid, and deserted wife may seize by attachment her husband's interest in a spendthrift trust, regardless whether the wife is a resident or a nonresident—Lippincott v. Lippincott, 37 A.2d 741, 349 Pa. 501—65 C.J. p. 239 note 99 [d] (3).
 (4) Decree for support and maintenance may not, in some circumstances, be subject to limitation by spendthrift clause of instrument creating trust.—Kelly v. Kelly, 79 P.2d 1059, 11 Cal.2d 356, 119 A.L.R. 71, applying Pennsylvania law.
 (5) The fact that a husband's motive in creating a trust was to deprive his wife of her distributive share of his estate is not, standing alone, such fraud as to render the trust void.—Huchner v. Buchner, 34 Pa. Dist. & Co. 597.

of his property in any manner he sees fit, provided it is not repugnant to law.⁹⁰ It has been held that a settlor is under no legal or moral obligation to the creditors of the beneficiary of a spendthrift trust,⁹¹ and the creation of such a trust takes nothing from a creditor of the beneficiary to which he previously had the right to look for payment.⁹² On the other hand, the courts in at least one jurisdiction have refused to extend the doctrine of spendthrift trusts to trusts in which the trustee's duty to pay the beneficiary is absolute.⁹³

In Virginia.

(1) The rule as stated in the text has been applied—Alderman v. Virginia Trust Co., 25 S.E.2d 333, 181 Va. 497—65 C.J. p. 239 note 99 [e] (2).

(2) Spendthrift trusts are valid for purposes prescribed by and within specified pecuniary limitations of statute authorizing trusts on condition that corpus and income or either be applied to beneficiaries' support without being subject to their liabilities or alienation by them—Alderman v. Virginia Trust Co., supra.

(3) A spendthrift trust, providing that beneficiary shall not transfer or anticipate his interest therein and that such interest shall not be subject to seizure by beneficiary's creditors, is permitted under statute within specified pecuniary limits—Blackwell v. Virginia Trust Co., 34 S.E.2d 301, 177 Va. 299.

(4) The statutory provision that estates up to value of $100,000 may be held in trust on condition that corpus and income or either be applied to beneficiaries' support, without being subject to their liabilities or alienation by them, is remedial, not restrictive, and makes material change in state's public policy respecting spendthrift trusts, so as to permit entire income or corpus of estate to be held in trust for beneficiary's support without being subject to alienation by him or payment of his debts, whether or not such maximum amount is reasonably necessary or proper for beneficiary's support—Alderman v. Virginia Trust Co., supra.

(5) The statute authorizing estates in trust on condition that corpus and income or either be applied to beneficiaries' support, without being subject to their liabilities or alienation by them, permits donor of estate to protect it from beneficiaries' spendthrift tendencies as to principal of trust as well as income therefrom—Alderman v. Virginia Trust Co., supra.

(6) Under statute authorizing spendthrift trusts, and equitable fee-simple or absolute equitable estate may be given to a person, subject to any spendthrift trust for his benefit for life or lesser period, which would be good under such statute if remainder in trust property were given to another—Alderman v. Virginia Trust Co., supra—Sheridan v. Krause, 172 S.E. 508, 161 Va. 873, 91 A.L.R. 1067.

(7) Spendthrift trust is not invalid under statute because it provides trustee shall pay income to cestui for support and maintenance instead of providing it shall be "applied" by trustee to his support and maintenance—Sheridan v. Krause, supra.

(8) Public policy does not require that statute respecting spendthrift trusts shall be strictly construed to end that wherever possible provisions against alienation by and subjection to debts of cestui may be held void—Sheridan v. Krause, supra.

(9) Where, under discretionary protective testamentary trust, trustee holds property, free from cestui's debts and may apply income to his support and such other purposes for his benefit as trustee considers proper, such trust is valid to extent necessary to enable trustee to carry it out for support and maintenance of cestui, but invalid to any greater extent—Sheridan v. Krause, supra.

(10) Under former statutes it was held that spendthrift trusts could not be created—Browning v. Blue Grass Hardware Co., 149 S.E. 497, 153 Va. 20—65 C.J. p. 239 note 99 [e] (1).

"The policy of protecting a spendthrift at the expense of his creditors is exceptional to the policy yet prevailing in the unwritten law that ability to pay debts requires payment. . . . A spendthrift, being one, will spend his income as he receives it. His unrestricted selection of his creditors whom he will pay seems almost a scorn of the law instead of a salutary guard. As has been said, protection and immunity from debts are not the same. One's welfare may be looked out for, but one's property may not be stamped as sealed against creditors. It is one thing to provide for another's needs and comforts, it is another to smooth the ways of improvidence."—Brahmev v. Rollins, supra.

contingent remainder in a third person,⁹⁵ which rule applies to trusts created by women in contemplation of marriage⁹⁶ or settlement of property after marriage.⁹⁷ The rule cannot be evaded by giving trustees unlimited discretion as to the use of property.⁹⁸ A spendthrift trust created for the benefit of the donor, however, is not invalid or revocable as far as the settlor is concerned,⁹⁹ but it has been held to be ineffective against his right to alienate his beneficial interest thereunder.⁴

§ 27. — Trusts with Unauthorized Purpose Taking Effect as Powers

Under some statutes where a trust is created for an unlawful purpose it may be valid as a power in trust if it directs or authorizes the performance of any act which may be lawfully performed under a power.

Under some statutes where a trust is created for a purpose not authorized by statute and is consequently void as such, it shall nevertheless be valid as a power in trust, if it directs or authorizes the performance of any act which may be lawfully performed under a power.¹ Under these statutory provisions many trusts, invalid as such, have been upheld as valid powers in trust,² as for example, trusts to sell⁴ or to convey⁵ realty, or trusts to maintain a residence,⁶ or a trust for the use of infant children,⁷ or trusts to hold realty for the benefit of a corporation to be used for religious and charitable purposes, the term of the trust to be measured by the lives of persons having no interest in the performance of the trust.⁸ The purposes of a power in trust are unlimited,⁹ except that they must be lawful purposes.¹⁰ The statute is not applicable where the instrument confers no power on the trustee to do any act in connection with the property.¹¹ It is indispensable to the creation of a power in trust that the authority to perform the required act should be rightfully delegated to the trustee by the person having authority to dispose of the estate, or some interest therein, in the manner directed by the power.¹² Where the trust is to be executed by the grantee for his own benefit, it cannot be valid as a power in trust.¹³

§ 28. Consideration

The necessity of a valuable consideration to support a trust depends on whether the trust is executed or executory.

A trust may be with or without consideration.¹⁴ The necessity of a valuable consideration to support a trust depends on whether the trust is executed or executory, it being the rule that equity will no more enforce a voluntary executory agreement to create or establish a trust, when made without consideration,¹⁵ than it will perfect a defective gift, as dis-

Person in prison

The fact that it is against public policy for a man at large to tie up his property for himself by a spendthrift trust, presents no valid reason for holding that a man in prison might not, consistent with sound public policy, create a spendthrift trust for himself during the period of his imprisonment.—Booth v. Chadwick, Tex.Civ.App., 184 S.W.2d 268, error refused.

Fraudulent conveyance

A spendthrift provision contained in trust may be invalid even though creation of such trust may not constitute a fraudulent conveyance.—Murphy v. C. I. T. Corp., 33 A.2d 16, 347 Pa. 691.

Solvency

A spendthrift provision cannot be inserted in a trust for benefit of grantor himself, even if he is solvent at time of its creation.—Murphy v. C. I. T. Corp., supra.

Partial invalidity

Spendthrift trusts in favor of settlor providing that unexpended principal should revert to settlor on certain date if alive, and in event of his prior death that 75 per cent should go to remaindermen and 25 per cent should be payable in accordance with settlor's will, were, as against settlor's creditors, void as to income, and as to the 25 per cent payable in accordance with settlor's will.—Liberty Storage & Warehouse Co. v. Van Wyck, 1 N.Y.S.2d 149, 165 Misc. 890.

cussed in Gifts § 34. On the other hand, where there is a completely executed voluntary contract to establish a trust and nothing further remains to be done by the grantor to transfer the title, the relation of trustee and cestui que trust is established and the equitable rights growing out of such conveyance in trust, although made without consideration, will be recognized and enforced,¹⁶ since it is considered as an executed gift, needing no consideration.¹⁷ Ordinarily, an incomplete voluntary trust, resting in fieri, will not be enforced in equity;¹⁸ but under some circumstances equity will enforce an incomplete trust, not supported by valuable consideration, by virtue of a meritorious consideration.¹⁹ This doctrine has been declared to be limited to trusts partially carried into effect by a deceased parent, in behalf of a child or children,²⁰ and it must plainly appear that the trust was created for the single and well defined purpose of the parent to execute the natural parental duty to support and maintain his child or children,²¹ which cannot be defeated without obvious injustice.²² If there is a valuable and sufficient consideration, equity will enforce the trust regardless of whether it is executed or executory.²³ constitute a sufficient consideration are payment of the purchase price;²⁵ prior interest in the land;²⁶ legal obligation to repay all or a part of the purchase price;²⁷ the personal convenience of the settlor;²⁸ covenant to care for and maintain the grantor in suitable condition during his natural life;²⁹ agreement to pay income to settlor;³⁰ agreement of heirs at law to have the executor carry out the provisions of an invalid will;³¹ abandonment of heir's privilege to contest will;³² agreement of wife to support herself and children;³³ a conveyance of land in trust made by one heir in recognition of the interest of other heirs;³⁴ agreement to pay one half of a mortgage note for money borrowed on land for a one-half interest in the land;³⁵ rights growing out of prior agreements;³⁶ the condonation of a wife's adultery and the resumption of marital relations;³⁷ renunciations of rights under a separation agreement and a resumption of marital relations;³⁸ wife's settlement of cause of action for separate maintenance;³⁹ abandonment of a will contest by one heir, and surrender by another heir of lots devised him;⁴⁰ and the trustee's acceptance of service as trustee and performance of prescribed duties.⁴¹ A trust agreement based on a false premise, which is quite contrary to fact, is without a sufficient consideration to support it.⁴²

Illegal consideration. Although consideration for the creation of a trust is illegal, the trust is enforceable if the beneficiary is not a party to the illegality.⁴³

Deed of trust under seal. A deed of trust under seal imports a consideration,⁴⁴ but the fact that an instrument agreeing to create a trust in the future is under seal does not prevent the court from ascertaining whether it was actually made on sufficient consideration.⁴⁵

Time of payment of consideration. The consideration need not be paid at the time of execution in order to create an express trust.⁴⁶

Held not inequitable

(1) Where trustor, aged 85, conveyed property to trustee in consideration of monthly payments from beneficiary for life and provided for conveyance of property to beneficiary upon trustor's death, fact that trustor died shortly after the agreement was made, so that actual obligations of the beneficiary were slight, did not render transaction inequitable—Ballard v. MacCallum, 101 P.2d 692, 15 Cal.2d 439.

(2) Where trust agreement provided for payment of certain charges and payments to trustor by beneficiary and that, in case of default for 10 days or 30 days after notice in writing, trustor at his option could cancel trust, beneficiary's claim to rights in trust estate was not rendered inequitable by failure to make required payments, since he was still obligated to pay at decedent's death and remedy of forfeiture after notice was available if he refused—Ballard v. MacCallum, supra.

Rule not applicable

The rule that resulting trust in land may not be created, unless payment of money to purchaser thereof is made before or concurrently with acquisition of property, is inapplicable to express trust in land, for interest in which others than trustee obligate themselves, before or concurrently with acquisition of title to pay part of consideration, which is paid after taking of title in trustee's name.—Nettles v. First Nat. Bank of Temple, Tex.Civ.App., 168 S.W.2d 920, error refused.

To whom consideration must pass. It is not necessary to the validity of a trust that it be based on a consideration passing to the trustee.⁴⁷

From whom derived. It is immaterial from whom the consideration is derived to support an express trust,⁴⁸ consequently the consideration need not be furnished by the beneficiary.⁴⁹ It has been held that if the consideration is the property of a minor, a person in loco parentis to such minor has no authority to impress on the property an express trust.⁵⁰

Trust on condition. A declaration of trust dependent on conditions precedent which are not fulfilled is not enforceable, since there is a failure of consideration.⁵¹ A trust made on condition of the surrender of a promissory note of the grantor has been held to be supported by the same consideration as the note.⁵²

§ 29. Time of Vesting

Subject to the rule against perpetuities, ordinarily it is no objection to the creation and validity of a trust that the enjoyment of the beneficiary's interest is postponed.

Subject to the rule against perpetuities, which is applicable to trusts, as discussed in Perpetuities §§ 20-34, and the rule that a trust must arise at the time it is attempted to be created, instead of being brought forth by subsequent and independent circumstances,⁵³ it is no objection to the creation and validity of a trust that the enjoyment of the ben-

Trust in life policies

Beneficiaries of trust in life policies claiming trust became effective on death of insured could not claim trust agreement was executory, since agreement could become effective on insured's death only if executed during insured's lifetime.—Love v. First Nat. Bank, 153 So. 189, 228 Ala. 258.

Mutation back

Where mother conveyed realty to son and took his oral promise to hold it in trust for purposes written down two years later in memorandum of agreement between son and beneficiary of trust, the trust was created when realty was first conveyed.—Davis v. U. S., D.C.N.Y., 27 F.Supp. 698.

Trust held not shown

(1) Under trust agreement whereby taxpayer agreed to hold securities as trustee for immediate benefit of himself, and whereby securities were ultimately to be divided among taxpayer's "heirs" if taxpayer left no surviving widow or issue, no valid present trust arose for benefit of

(2) Under trust agreement whereby bachelor agreed to hold securities as trustee for immediate benefit of himself, and whereby securities would ultimately pass to bachelor's widow, if any, on failure of issue, no trust arose for benefit of widow.—Morsman v. (3) Under trust agreement whereby bachelor agreed to hold securities as trustee for immediate benefit of himself, and whereby securities were ultimately to be held by successor trustee for benefit of bachelor's issue, if any, for certain period, and then to be divided among issue, if any, no express trust arose on behalf of issue.—Morsman v. C. I. R., C.C.A. 8, 90 F.2d 18, 113 A.L.R. 441, certiorari denied Morsman v. Helvering, 58 S.Ct. 20, 302 U.S. 701, 82 L.Ed. 542.

Declarations held insufficient

Declarations in letter from stepmother, who was executrix of will of plaintiff's father, that father had left certain sum in trust with stepmother, and that she would do as he wanted, indicated only stepmother's belief that it was desire of father of plaintiff to create a trust taking effect after his death, but the desire, being testamentary in character, could only be made effective by provision therefor in a properly executed will, in absence of which, no trust was created. Such declaration by stepmother was not, under all the circumstances, such a clear and unequivocal indication by stepmother absolutely to relinquish her beneficial interest in the fund in present as would result in the creation of a trust in personality.—Fritz v. Thompson, Cal.App., 271 P.2d 205.

eficiary's interest is postponed,⁵⁴ provided the legal title passes to the trustee, as considered supra § 22, and a present interest vests.⁵⁵ The fact that the enjoyment of the estate is postponed to a future date does not negative the idea that a present interest is created,⁵⁶ and the fact that a trust cannot be administered and settled until after the death of the settlor does not invalidate the trust.⁵⁷ Where the settlor reserves a life interest, the receipt of dividends or use of the trust property is not inconsistent with an intention to create a present trust.⁵⁸ The rule applicable to constructive trusts, as discussed infra § 139, and resulting trusts, infra § 102, that the trust arises, if at all, at the time title passes, does not apply to express trusts.⁵⁹

Vesting in possession. It is competent for the settlor to make his death the event on the happening of which the estate in interest, previously vested in present but to be enjoyed in futuro, is to come into possession,⁶⁰ and such a trust does not circumvent the statute of wills.⁶¹

Trusts for benefit of future subscribers. Where titles are held by trustees under articles of agreement for the benefit of subscribers under the articles, the trust does not take effect until there are subscribers.⁶²

§ 30. Statutory Provisions in General

Where there are statutes regulating trusts, a trust, in order to be valid, must be created in accordance with their provisions; but the validity of a trust created before the passage of a statute regulating or prohibiting trusts of that class is not affected thereby, since such statutes are prospective and not retrospective in operation.

A statutory prohibition of some kind is necessary to render invalid any trust which would otherwise be valid at common law.⁶³ Where there are statutes regulating trusts, a trust, in order to be valid, must be created in accordance with their provisions;⁶⁴ but the validity of a trust created before the passage of a statute regulating or prohibiting trusts of that class is not affected thereby, since such statutes are prospective and not retrospective in operation.⁶⁵

Where, however, a statute deals only with procedure, such statute is a remedial one, and it may be retrospective.⁶⁶ Since the courts do not favor repeals by implication, as a general rule a statute with respect to trusts is not deemed to repeal an earlier one without express words of repeal, unless the two are in such conflict that both cannot be given effect.⁶⁷

the fidei commissum of the Roman law, which correspond to the trusts of the English law, are abolished by statute,⁶⁸ but subsequent constitutional provisions have authorized the legislature to enact statutes authorizing the creation of such trusts.⁶⁹ In a few other jurisdictions statutes have been passed abolishing all uses and trusts except such as are therein expressly authorized, as discussed supra § 25, and trusts not so authorized are absolutely void and unenforceable.⁷⁰ There is, however, an increasing tendency in the direction of liberality in construing such statutes, and, while there has been no abatement by the courts of the strictness with which limitations which transgress the rule against perpetuities are construed, dispositions of property by way of trust within that limit will be sustained where they can fairly be brought within the spirit of the statute of uses and trusts, although not within its literal language.⁷¹

(3) Plaintiff as trustee claiming legal title to open accounts under trust agreement could not maintain suit on such accounts, since trust estate with tenures of property as legal title in one person and equitable title in another was not recognized under civil law.—Buck v. (4) Where insured corporation executed trust agreement authorizing trustee to prosecute suit on fire policies, the trust was valid under Louisiana law, and the trustee was authorized to maintain the suit.—Hart v. Mechanics & Traders Ins. Co. of Hartford, Conn., supra.

(5) Judge's ruling that trust for settlor's wife and children was governed by 1920 statute permitting donations, and that 1902 statute regulating banks organized to conduct savings and trust banking business was inapplicable, was held correct, as was judicially admitted by children when alleging in petition for appointment of new trustees that trust was created under 1920 statute, with respect to trustee bank's right to sell securities and reinvest proceeds.—In re Liquidation of Canal Bank & Trust Co., 159 So. 325, 181 La. 207.

2. PAROL TRUSTS AND EFFECT OF STATUTE OF FRAUDS

§ 31. In General

Whether an express trust is required to be in writing or may be created or proved by parol depends on the statutory provisions relating thereto, if any, in the jurisdiction.

While it has been broadly stated without more in many jurisdictions that express trusts must be created or proved by a writing and cannot be created or proved by parol,⁷² it would be more accurate to state that in such jurisdictions, under statutes to that effect, an express trust in land cannot be created or proved by parol, as discussed infra § 32, but that in most of such jurisdictions an express trust in personalty can be created or proved by parol, as considered infra § 35. The rule is that except as otherwise provided by statute an enforceable trust can be created without a writing.⁷³ At common law a trust can be created by parol;⁷⁴ but since secret and parol trusts offer easy means of effectuating fraud, and promote perjury, the English statute of frauds was enacted, providing in section seven that all declarations or creations of trusts or confidences in lands, tenements, or hereditaments shall be manifested and proved by some writing signed by the party who is by law to declare such trust or by his last will in writing, or else they shall be utterly void and of no effect.⁷⁵ In those states in which this section has been substantially reenacted, the rule of construction adopted is that the trust need not be created by writing, but the evidence of the existence of the trust must be in writing.⁷⁶ In other jurisdictions the statutes which provide substantially that trusts in or concerning lands, except such as arise by operation of law, must be created or declared by an instrument in writing have been held not to be substantially different,⁷⁷ while in at least one jurisdiction it is the requirement that all express trusts must be created or declared in writing.⁷⁸ In a few jurisdictions in which this section of the statute of frauds has not been reenacted in any form it has been held not to be necessary for an express trust to be in writing.⁷⁹ Nevertheless, in at least one jurisdiction which failed to adopt the provision from the English statute of frauds it has been held that it is a part of the common law from the earliest days that an express trust in real estate may not be proved by parol.⁸⁰

The benefit of the statute of frauds was intended to be for those claiming title under instruments absolute on their face and not for those seeking to defeat the operation of such instruments by showing that they were made on trusts not appearing on their face.⁸¹ The creditor of a legatee has no better rights against the estate than the legatee himself, and cannot, therefore, establish in the executors a secret trust by parol declarations or instructions of the testator,⁸² although it has been held that the fact that a trust was not in writing is no defense as against creditors seeking to set aside conveyances as in fraud of their rights.⁸³ Agreements, transactions, or conveyances which do not create or attempt to create any trust are obviously not affected by statutes of this character.⁸⁴ The statute of trusts was not designed to operate as a vehicle for the promotion of injustice but as a means of preventing fraud;⁸⁵ and the statute of frauds does not apply to a trust where the action of the trustee amounts to a fraud.⁸⁶

In jurisdictions where the statute of frauds or similar provision prohibiting parol trusts does prevail it does not apply to resulting trusts, as discussed infra § 101, or constructive trusts, infra § 141.

§ 32. Trusts in or Affecting Land

- a. Statutes relating specifically to trusts
- b. In absence of statute relating specifically to trusts

a. Statutes Relating Specifically to Trusts

In jurisdictions which have adopted some form of statute similar to the original statute of frauds relating to trusts, or recognize such rule, express trusts in lands cannot be created or declared, or manifested and proved, by parol; nor can an express trust be engraved by parol on a conveyance absolute in form.

While a parol trust in land is valid and enforceable at common law and general equity jurisprudence,⁸⁷ it is the rule, where the provisions of the statute of frauds, which are expressly applicable to trusts in lands, tenements, and hereditaments, have been enacted, that express trusts in lands cannot be "created or declared" or cannot be "manifested and proved," according to the particular phraseology of the statute invoked, by parol;⁸⁸ and the operation of the rule is not affected by the fact that the parties to the trust agreement are copartners,⁸⁹ or by the fact that the lands which form the subject matter of the parol agreement are directed by a will to be converted into personalty, where the agreement forms no part of the will.⁹⁰

In accordance with the above rule it is generally held, except in jurisdictions where there is no provision in the statute of frauds relating specifically to trusts, as discussed infra subdivision b of this section, that an express trust cannot be engrafted by parol on a deed, devise, assignment, or other conveyance absolute in form,⁹¹ even though such parol trust agreement does not operate as a mortgage so that it will not be invalid under a statute prohibiting a parol defeasance of a deed absolute on its face,⁹² at least in the absence of fraud or a similar factor in the procurement of the execution of the deed,⁹³ and particularly after a long period has elapsed.⁹⁴ However, the rule does not apply to an absolute deed which is not valid both in form and substance, as where it is wholly without consideration.⁹⁵

A statute requiring an express trust concerning lands to be in writing does not apply to a trust created by a collector of money contributions for the benefit of another.⁹⁶ Since a resulting trust is not within the statute of frauds, as discussed infra § 101, such a trust is not converted into an express trust, to which the statute would apply, by a writing subsequently made, acknowledging the trust.⁹⁷ Where parol evidence is offered as to a trust, not for the purpose of establishing it, but for the purpose of showing that the conveyance made in executing it was made on an adequate consideration and for a proper purpose, it is admissible.⁹⁸

Where a trust springs out of the relationship of principal and agent, the relation arises from the agreement between the parties, and such agreement is within the statute of frauds requiring the trust to be proved by written testimony.⁹⁹

In Georgia

(2) Where plaintiff purportedly conveyed her duplex to her son-in-law for ten thousand dollars by duly recorded deed, which stated that conveyance was for ten dollars and other valuable consideration, in return for right to have a home in one of the apartments for balance of her life without cost, plaintiff did not obtain any interest under such purported agreement since parties would be attempting to set up an express trust by parol.—Smith v. Lynch, 80 S.E.2d 175, 210 Ga. 338.

Land in another jurisdiction

In suit to impose trust on Texas lands purchased by devise with proceeds of foreign lands allegedly devised by nonresident in trust for plaintiff, devisee's writings and parol evidence to establish oral trust was held inadmissible, and judgment imposing trust was erroneous, in absence of any written declaration of trust as required by foreign statute.—King v. Lowry, Tex.Civ.App., 80 S.W.2d 790, error refused, applying Missouri law.

St. Tex. art. 7425 b-7, enacted in 1943, a trust in relation to, or consisting of, real property is invalid unless created, established, or declared by a written instrument subscribed by the trustor, or by any other instrument under which the trustee claims the estate affected,¹ and the rule now is the same as it is in those states in which the seventh section of the English statute of frauds has been adopted,² although prior to this statute parol trusts of realty were recognized.³ However, even though the enforcement of a parol trust on an absolute deed was formerly recognized,⁴ it would not be permitted where to do so would be in fraud of the rights of creditors or innocent purchasers.⁵ Moreover, even under the prior rule it was held that in order to establish a parol trust it was necessary to show a valid and enforceable contract between the parties, the requisites of which contract included, among other things, mutuality and valid consideration and compliance with other provisions of the statute of frauds.⁶

In West Virginia. Under a statute enacted in 1931, Code, 36-1-4, the legislature in effect adopted the seventh section of the statute of frauds, and hence there may no longer be an oral express trust of real property,⁷ except in so far as the statute ex-

Subject to some exceptions and restrictions, a valid trust in land may ordinarily be created and established by parol in jurisdictions where the statute of frauds relating to trusts has not been adopted.

Except where the principle prohibiting parol trusts of land is recognized apart from statute, as part of the common law,⁸ a valid trust in land may ordinarily be created and established by parol in jurisdictions where the seventh section of the English statute of frauds has not been enacted in any form,⁹ or where a like provision did not exist at the time the trust was created;¹⁰ and in these jurisdictions it is generally held that an express trust may, by parol, be engrafted on an absolute deed,¹¹ provided the declaration of trust is contemporaneous with or a condition of the giving of the deed, and is not made thereafter.¹² It has been held that a parol trust of land is necessarily created by a transaction of contract to which the parol promise is complementary;¹³ and, hence, that a parol trust cannot be engrafted on an inheritance since the devolution of title in case of intestacy is not a voluntary act of the deceased owner.¹⁴

A provision that contracts concerning land shall be in writing does not affect the validity of trusts, or the evidence by which they may be established, in some of the jurisdictions in which the statute of frauds does not deal specifically with the creation of trusts;¹⁵ but in other jurisdictions of this class it is held that a general provision that all conveyances of real estate or of any interest therein, and all contracts creating or evidencing any encum-deed executed prior to enactment of statute.—Hull v. Burns, 169 S.E. 522, 113 W.Va. 829.

Evidence excluded

In action to establish an alleged resulting trust in favor of plaintiff and his brothers and sisters in farm conveyed in fee to one of brothers, evidence of contributions by friends and neighbors to enable brother to purchase farm was properly excluded as an attempt to establish an express trust by parol.—Dickinson v. Dickinson, 40 A.2d 184, 131 Conn. 392.

Agreement to convey

A mere parol agreement to convey land to another raises no trust in favor of the person claiming as grantee under such alleged agreement, and comes within the provisions of the statute of frauds.—Wolfe v. North Carolina Joint Stock Land Bank, 13 S.E.2d 533, 219 N.C. 313.

"Contract to sell lands" distinguished

The distinction between a "contract to sell lands" which would be within the statute of frauds, and oral contract for establishment of a trust which would not, is that in the former, a suit would be for specific performance of the contract, and in the latter for enforcement of a parol trust.—Peele v. LeRoy, 22 S.E.2d 244, 222 N.C. 123.

General admissibility of parol evidence

(1) Since an oral declaration of trust in realty is lawful, and can only be proved by oral evidence, it is not within operation of rule forbidding admission of parol evidence to vary, alter, or contradict the terms of a valid written instrument.—Virginia Trust Co. v. Minar, 18 S.E.2d 879, 179 Va. 377.

(2) A trust may be impressed on realty by parol proof which does not contradict the terms of the deed or a valid written instrument relating to character of title conveyed by the deed.—Seaton v. Dye, Tenn.App., 263 S.W.2d 544.

(3) Parol evidence of trust is not inadmissible as tending to contradict the terms of a written instrument unless the language of the instrument is such as to exclude the existence of a trust.—Adrian v. Brown, 196 S.W.2d 118, 29 Tenn.App. 236.

brance on real estate, shall be by deed, forbids the creation of an express trust in land by parol,¹⁶ although it does not apply to resulting trusts, as discussed infra § 101, or constructive trusts, as considered infra § 141. A wife purchasing land in her own name with money from her separate estate cannot create a parol trust therein in favor of her husband in the event he survive.¹⁷

§ 33. — Agreement by Grantee to Hold in Trust or Reconvey

Except in so far as the rule may differ under statutes of frauds not relating specifically to trusts, it is generally held that an oral promise or agreement to hold property acquired by an absolute conveyance in trust for the grantor or other designated persons does not create an enforceable trust under the statute of frauds.

A verbal promise or agreement by the grantee in an absolute conveyance, either contemporaneous with, or prior or subsequent to, the conveyance, to hold the land conveyed in trust for the grantor or other designated persons, does not create an enforceable trust under the statute of frauds or similar statutes,¹⁸ unless the circumstances surrounding the transaction are such as to show a resulting trust, as discussed infra § 109, or a constructive trust, as considered infra § 149; and the grantee takes the absolute title the same as though the agreement had not been made.¹⁹ Illustrations of this rule may be found in cases where such an oral agreement accompanies a conveyance from husband to wife, either directly²⁰ or through the medium of a third person,²¹ as well as conveyances from several joint tenants in common to one of their number;²² and it has frequently been held that a parol agreement by the grantee in an absolute conveyance to reconvey, on request, to the grantor,²³ or to some

Oral declaration instead of reformation

It has been held that where a deed has been made to the wrong grantee, if no attempt is made to secure the reformation, but those interested rely entirely on an oral declaration of the grantee that he will hold the property in trust for those who are interested, the oral declaration is within the statute and not enforceable—Tourtillotte v. Tourtillotte, 81 N.E. 909 265 Mass 547.

In Texas

(1) Where plaintiff and defendant were buying lands jointly and plaintiff did not pay or become liable for payment of any of the consideration moving to the grantor of the lands which were conveyed to defendant, and the agreement contemplated that title should be taken only in the name of defendant, trust, if any, was an "express trust," and hence invalid under the statute providing that a trust in relation to realty to be valid must be supported by a written instrument—Starr v. Hopley, Tex.Civ.App., 265 S.W.2d 225

(2) Where administratrix, who acquired an undivided one-third interest in estate of intestate from the heirs, allegedly made an oral agreement that she would hold one-half of the one-third interest in trust for her sister, but the heirs had no knowledge of such alleged oral agreement, and no trust was created, parol evidence was not admissible to change effect of deed from heirs to administratrix—Sevine v. Heissner, Tex.Civ.App., 262 S.W.2d 218, error refused no reversible error.

other person who may be designated in the agreement,²⁴ is within the statute of frauds and unenforceable, although, on the other hand, where the statute is used as a cover to fraud, equity will grant relief.²⁵ The same general rule has been held to apply to property which has been acquired pursuant to judicial process.²⁶ However, where a grantee's agreement is essentially a mere parol contract for the payment of money rather than a trust it does not come within the requirements of the statute of frauds as to trusts and is valid.²⁷

Where property is conveyed to a grantee with the understanding that he is subsequently to reconvey it and the grantee makes a declaration of trust with provisions not contemplated by the grantor, the grantor is nevertheless bound by that instrument and cannot assert the statute of frauds as to the challenged provisions while relying on the other parts of the instrument to sustain his claim of ownership.²⁸

Under statutes of frauds not relating specifically to trusts. In jurisdictions where, owing to the absence of any statute equivalent to the seventh section of the English statute of frauds, parol trusts in land are or were generally held valid, as discussed supra § 32 b, agreements by which a parol trust is impressed on land conveyed by absolute deed have in some cases and under some circumstances been held valid, and in other cases invalid.²⁹

In West Virginia. Under the statute, Code 36-1-4, expressly so providing, if a conveyance of land, not fraudulent, is made to one in trust either for the grantor or a third person, such trust may be enforced, even though it is not disclosed on the face of the conveyance or evidenced by a writing;³⁰

What constitutes fraud

The fraud contemplated by legislature in enactment of statutory provision must be in conveyance itself on basis of which a trust is sought to be established; and fact that plaintiff entered into a contract for sale of realty to defendants which contained false statement that defendants had paid plaintiff a specified sum of money, which statement was inserted so that defendant could obtain an FHA loan, did not vitiate the transaction or defendants' oral promise to reconvey the realty to plaintiff when plaintiff's military service was terminated, and was not such fraud as would bar plaintiff in court of equity from establishing a parol trust whereunder defendants were obligated to reconvey the realty to plaintiff when plaintiff's military service was terminated.—Hoglund v. Curtis, 61 S.E.2d 642, 134 W.Va. 735.

and, since the statute so providing contains the general prohibition against parol trusts, as appears supra § 32 a, the method set out in the provision is the only permissible way of creating an oral express trust.³¹

§ 34. — Agreement as to Land to Be Purchased

Except where statutes do not forbid parol trusts of land, a parol promise or agreement by one person to purchase lands and hold them in trust for, or convey to, another is within the statute of frauds and unenforceable.

A parol promise or agreement by one person to purchase lands and hold them in trust for, or convey to, another is within the statute of frauds, and not enforceable as an express trust.³² A verbal agreement between two or more persons to make a joint purchase of lands, title to be taken in the name of one for the benefit of all, is within the rule,³³ as is also a parol promise or agreement by one to purchase at an execution, foreclosure, or other judicial sale and hold in trust for the judgment debtor or convey to him on reimbursement of the purchase price;³⁴ and a like rule applies to a parol agreement to purchase land at a judicial sale, for the benefit of the debtor's wife,³⁵ children,³⁶ or heirs,³⁷ or of an assignor of the judgment.³⁸ So an agreement to purchase from the purchaser at a judicial sale and then allow the debtor to redeem on reimbursement of the money advances,³⁹ or an agreement of the same general nature,⁴⁰ is within the statute of frauds and must be in writing; but a contract merely reserving to a redemptioner his right to redeem, or purchasing such right from him, is not within the statute of frauds.⁴¹

Assignment to one acting for mortgagor

An oral contract between mortgagee's and mortgagor's attorneys that mortgagee should bid in mortgaged realty at foreclosure sale and assign bid to mortgagor's daughter, who fore or at the time of the sale,⁴³ have been held valid in some cases, as have parol agreements between two or more parties whereby one of them is to purchase land for the common benefit of all, taking title in his own name.⁴⁴ However, a declaration by a purchaser of land, made subsequent to the purchase, that a third person should be admitted as a partner in the purchase,⁴⁵ or a mere agreement to buy land for another, the purchase being in fact made in the promisor's own name and on his own credit,⁴⁶ has been held to violate the statute of frauds requiring contracts for the sale of realty to be in writing.

should pay mortgage debt by certain date, was not unenforceable under statute of frauds because daughter had no title to property, as she acted for mortgagor who had title thereto—Hunter v. Hunt, 178 S.W.2d 609, 296 Ky 769.

§ 35. Trusts in Personality in General

As a general rule express trusts in personality may be created and established, or engrafted on a written instrument, by parol.

While it has been held that where the statute declares that all express trusts must be created or declared in writing, a trust in personal property cannot be created by parol,⁴⁷ it is the general rule that express trusts in personal property may be created and established, or engrafted on a written instrument, by parol, not only in those jurisdictions where there is no provision relating specifically to the creation of trusts,⁴⁸ but also in those jurisdictions in which the statutes requiring declarations of trust to be in writing by their express terms relate only to trusts in real property;⁴⁹ and a trust created by parol is valid, if it related only to personal property at the time of its creation, even though it subsequently affects real property.⁵⁰ Nevertheless, it has been held that the courts are reluctant to enforce an alleged parol trust in personal property,⁵¹ and may require a high degree of proof to establish such a trust by parol evidence, as discussed infra § 71.

The rule that trusts in personality may be created or established by parol has been held to apply to various items of personal property,⁵² including money,⁵³ bank deposits,⁵⁴ promissory notes,⁵⁵ securities,⁵⁶ shares of corporate stock,⁵⁷ and the proceeds of life insurance policies⁵⁸ even though insurer is ignorant thereof.⁵⁹ The rule has also been applied to real estate mortgages;⁶⁰ and, on the theory that partnership property is regarded in law as personal property as among the partners in connection with the partnership business, a trust may be created by parol of partnership rights which are essentially in the nature of real estate.⁶¹

Creation of parol trust in personality. Where a trust in personality may be created by parol, no particular words are required to create or declare such a trust;⁶² but a voluntary executory agreement for the creation of an oral trust in personality, or an unexecuted or imperfect gift of personality, is insufficient to establish the existence of a completed verbal trust.⁶³

§ 36. Agreements as to Proceeds of Sale of Land

A parol agreement to hold the proceeds of a sale of land in trust for another constitutes a trust in personality and is enforceable if the agreement is unconnected with, or separable from, any trust in the land itself.

It has been held that, even where an express trust in land cannot be established by parol, as discussed supra § 32 a, a parol agreement, on sufficient consideration, to hold the proceeds of a sale of land in trust for another constitutes a trust in personal property and is enforceable if the agreement is unconnected with, or separable from, any trust in the land itself,⁶⁴ or if that part of the trust relating to the land has been fully performed,⁶⁵ or the promise to hold the proceeds in trust is made or renewed after the land has been sold.⁶⁶ However, where there were no proceeds in existence at the time the agreement was made, and no new promise was made after the sale of the land,⁶⁷ or the agreement as to the proceeds is otherwise inseparable from a trust in the land,⁶⁸ the parol agreement is within the statute of frauds and unenforceable unless it has been executed; but it has also been held that, if the land has been converted into money, a trust as to the proceeds is enforceable although there was no declaration of trust after the conversion.⁶⁹

Applying these rules, it has been held that a valid parol trust is created by an agreement to share the profits arising on a sale of land;⁷⁰ an agreement to pay over to a third person a portion of the price received on sale of specific real property;⁷¹ an agreement by the grantees in a quitclaim deed to redeem the land from a sale under mortgage foreclosure, sell it at a price to be approved by the grantor, pay themselves out of the proceeds, and pay the balance to the grantor;⁷² an agreement to buy a mortgage on the land of another, sell the premises for his benefit, and account for the balance over disbursements;⁷³ an agreement by a mortgagee, on a conveyance to him of the mortgaged property, to account on a sale of the property for the proceeds in excess of the mortgage debt;⁷⁴ an agreement between a mortgagee and the wife of the mortgagor that if she would join in the mortgage and not contest foreclosure or redeem from the sale the mortgagee would purchase the land and, on reselling the same, would pay her a certain portion of the proceeds;⁷⁵ or an agreement between a mortgagor and mortgagee that the former shall enter appearance to a pending foreclosure and waive the stay allowed by law, in consideration of which the mortgagee shall bid in the premises at the amount of the decree, interest, and costs, resell at private sale, and pay the mortgagor the amount realized in excess of the bid.⁷⁶

Mineral rights reserved

Agreement between partners, at time partnership was terminated and assets divided, that mineral rights reserved from conveyances of partnership land title to which was taken in individual names of partners should be held in trust for different copartners could be created by parol—*Barritt v. Absolute transfer of land to trustee

Where plaintiffs allegedly executed oral agreement with defendant under which plaintiffs' property was sold to defendant in consideration for payment of certain obligations of plaintiffs by defendant, and defendant agreed to resell the property and retain amount expended by him and pay balance to the plaintiffs, plaintiffs in bringing action based on alleged refusal of defendant to accept reasonable offer for the property were not seeking to enforce an oral trust in realty and the claim was not barred by the statute of frauds.—*Williams v. On other other hand, it has been held that no enforceable trust arises from a parol agreement between a trustee and the beneficial owner of land that the trustee shall sell the land, discharge liens, and hold the balance of the proceeds for the benefit of the owner's children;⁷⁷ an oral declaration after the grant of land by decedent that the purpose thereof was to avoid the necessity of making a will and that he intended the grantee to sell the property and distribute the proceeds among decedent's children;⁷⁸ an agreement that the grantee of land should hold the premises in trust for the benefit of a designated person, to collect the rents, pay taxes and encumbrances, sell the land, and pay over the difference between the sums received and those paid by the grantee;⁷⁹ an agreement between one who holds an option to purchase land and another that the latter shall buy the land, take title in his own name, and on resale pay the optionee one half of the profits;⁸⁰ an agreement that land conveyed by an absolute deed to the cashier of a bank shall be held as security for the grantor's indebtedness to the bank, that the grantee shall sell the land, and apply the proceeds on the debt;⁸¹ an agreement to buy land at execution sale and resell it, and, after deducting the purchase price and expenses, pay over the balance to the execution defendant;⁸² or an agreement that a grantee of land, under a deed containing no restrictions or directions, shall sell the land after the grantor's death and divide the proceeds between designated persons.⁸³

A verbal agreement accompanying an absolute conveyance of land, that the property should be sold by the grantee and the proceeds be given to the grantor, after reimbursing the grantee for advances, creates an express trust void under the statute of frauds.⁸⁴ So also it has been held that an agreement, made at the time of executing a deed, that the grantee shall hold the title in trust for the grantor and, on sale of the land, pay the proceeds to him, is within the statute of frauds forbidding express trusts in lands by parol,⁸⁵ but that the rule does not apply where the grantor retains possession of the premises, collects the rents and profits, and converts them to his own use.⁸⁶

Income from land. It has been held that an oral trust to pay over the income from certain lands may in a proper case be recognized as a valid oral trust.⁸⁷

§ 37. Execution or Part Performance of Trust and Waiver of Statute

A parol trust obnoxious to the statute of frauds is merely voidable by the trustee, who may waive the statute; and a parol trust is valid if acknowledged by the trustee or fully, or even partly, performed.

The statute of frauds relating to trust concerns only the parties to the trust agreement and their privies.⁸⁸ Accordingly, a parol trust obnoxious to the statute of frauds is not absolutely void, but merely voidable at the election of the trustee⁸⁹ who may waive the benefit of the statute.⁹⁰ If the existence of the trust is acknowledged by the trustee,⁹¹ or the trust has been fully performed and executed,⁹² it will be upheld and the statute of frauds deemed to have no application, and the acknowledgment of the trust, or the performance thereof, may be shown by parol, as discussed infra § 70; and this is particularly true where the trustee has by his conduct in ratifying and affirming the trust induced others to change their position because of it.⁹³ In such case a conveyance by the trustee in execution of the trust is based on sufficient consideration as against strangers,⁹⁴ and relates back to the oral agreement, so as to take precedence over any interest meanwhile derived from the trustee by one who is not an innocent purchaser for value,⁹⁵ but where a trust is only a constructive one no oral recognition of it by the trustee will operate to change his relation from a constructive to an express trustee.⁹⁶ It has been held that a deed absolute in form may be shown by parol evidence to have been made in trust for the benefit of the grantor, where the grantor remains in possession of the land.⁹⁷ On the other hand, it has also been held that the recognition by the grantee of property that he holds the title thereto in trust does not aid the party claiming such to be the case, for however convincing the proof of the parol trust may be, the court cannot enforce a mere parol trust in the face of the statute declaring it void.⁹⁸

Written acknowledgment; retrospective operation

The statute of frauds does not preclude a court from enforcing a trust resting in parol alone if such trust is manifested and proved by subsequent written acknowledgment by trustee and such trust operates ret-

Part performance. An express parol trust may be taken out of the statute of frauds by part performance,⁹⁹ but the acts relied on for such purpose must be those of the beneficiary, rather than of the grantor,¹ and must have been done solely with a view to, or in connection with, the performance of the verbal agreement,² and the agreement must have respectively from time of its creation by subsequent proof or acknowledgment.—Coles v. Osback, 80 A.2d 464, 15 N.J. Super. 367, reversed on other grounds 92 A.2d 35, 22 N.J. Super. 358.

Consent to steps taken by beneficiary been so far executed that refusal of full execution would be inequitable.³

§ 38. Requisites and Sufficiency of Writing to Satisfy Statute of Frauds

The writing declaring or manifesting the existence of the trust need not be executed contemporaneously with the transfer of the legal title and the creation of the trust, but may be executed subsequent thereto.

It is not necessary that the writing declaring or manifesting the existence of the trust be executed contemporaneously with the transfer of the legal title and the creation of the trust,⁴ but it is sufficient if executed subsequent thereto;⁵ and the fact that a considerable period of time has intervened between the agreement creating the trust and the making of the writing required by the statute of frauds is immaterial,⁶ although it has been held that a parol agreement to hold land in trust was not validated by a writing made over twenty years afterward, setting down what the parties could remember of the original agreement.⁷

ute of frauds generally are discussed in Frauds, Statute of §§ 170-215.

§ 39. — Nature and Form

- a. In general
- b Particular writings

a. In General

The statute of frauds may be satisfied by any writing or writings, however informal, which sufficiently manifest or acknowledge the existence of the trust and disclose its nature, subject, purpose, and terms with certainty.

In so far as the statute of frauds has been construed as not requiring the trust to be declared in writing, but as requiring merely that there be some written evidence manifesting the existence of the trust, as discussed supra § 31, the courts, although strict in interpreting the statute of frauds to require some writing, are liberal in their construction as to the kind of writing required, and hold that the statute is satisfied by any writing, however informal, which sufficiently manifests or acknowledges the existence of the trust,⁸ and discloses its nature, subject, purpose, and terms,⁹ with the certrust in the premises in daughter's favor, in absence of proof that the repairs were made subsequent to mother's death—Hanney v. Clark, 198 A. 577, 124 Conn. 140.

Essential elements to be stated

Deed or instrument containing a voluntary trust must indicate with reasonable certainty intention to create the trust, subject matter, purpose, and beneficiary of the trust and acceptance of the trust by the trustee—Laughlin v. March, 145 P.2d 549, 19 Wash.2d 874, applying California law.

Sufficiency to permit introduction of parol evidence

Where realty was conveyed to grantor's daughter without consideration and grantee thereafter, in a writing delivered to grantor, promised that she would make a specified disposition, such writing together with subsequent letters, acknowledging the promise to divide, which referred to "the farm" sufficiently satisfied statute, requiring trusts concerning lands to be created in writing, to permit introduction of parol evidence to identify the real estate subject to trust—Lehman v. Pierce, 36 N.E.2d 952, 109 Ind.App. 497.

tainty which is required in declarations of trust generally without regard to the statute of frauds.¹⁰ While it has been held that the writing must contain within itself, and without the aid of parol evidence, all that is necessary to enable the court to declare a trust,¹¹ at least in so far as the identity of land involved is concerned,¹² it has also been held that the writings, in being considered for the purpose of satisfying the statute of frauds, are to be considered in their setting,¹³ and that parol evidence is admissible to make clear the terms of a trust the existence of which is established by a writing, as discussed infra § 70.

Ordinarily the written evidence of an express trust must come from the grantor or from the trustee, not from the cestui que trust.¹⁴ The writing evidencing or establishing the trust need not be addressed to the cestui que trust.¹⁵ The writing need not contain the words "trust" or "in trust."¹⁶

Separate writings. In so far as the requirement of a writing is concerned, the declaration of trust

need not be contained in the instrument which transfers the legal title, but may be set out in a separate instrument,¹⁷ or in several papers or instruments, provided they are related to, and connected with, each other and, when construed together, evidence the existence of a trust,¹⁸ although the grantee in a deed is not affected by a declaration of trust as to the land conveyed, made by the grantor in a separate paper which is not referred to in the deed or known by the grantee,¹⁹ and a trust is not sufficiently created in writing where an affidavit merely refers to a declaration of trust, without adopting its statements or affirming its truth.²⁰

Declaration of trust by means of several writings generally see infra § 48.

Writing and subsequent letters

Where realty was conveyed to grantor's daughter without consideration, and grantee thereafter, in a writing delivered to grantor, promised that she would make a specified disposition, such writing together with subsequent letters, acknowledging the promise to divide with grantor's son, was sufficient to establish creation of an express trust under statute requiring such trusts concerning realty to be created in writing—Lehman v. Pierce, 36 N.E.2d 952, 109 Ind.App. 497.

Particular writings as satisfying requirements of statute of frauds generally see Frauds, Statute of § 176.

Particular writings held sufficient

(1) A deed conveying realty, to which grantor held title in trust, to beneficiary as trustee for his sons until his death, on which title should vest in sons, created valid trust for sons' benefit—Aronian v. Asadoorian, 52 N.E.2d 397, 315 Mass. 274.

(2) An instrument, reciting that signer held title to realty, conveyed to her by ordinary grant deed, in trust for her sister and would execute deed thereof to latter on her request.—Wood v. American Nat. Bank of San Bernardino, 74 P.2d 1051, 24 Cal.App.2d 313.

(3) Where at time wife took title to realty under deed there was an oral agreement that she was to hold title for benefit of bank and husband who were to divide net proceeds from property, and oral agreement was referred to and incorporated in two written instruments and in divers correspondence.—First Nat. Bank of Ottawa v. Weiss, 76 N.E.2d 538, 333 Ill.App. 1.

(4) Where written entry of savings bank deposit in name of depositor as trustee for another was made on bank's records at depositor's direction, passbook evidencing deposit was issued by bank in favor of depositor as trustee, and depositor signed identification card as trustee.—Wilder v. Howard, 4 S.E.2d 199, 188 Ga. 428.

ments,²² bonds,²³ notes and mortgages,²⁴ receipts,²⁵ memoranda,²⁶ and written agreements.²⁷ On the other hand, tax lists or books are not sufficient to establish a trust;²⁸ nor is an irrevocable power of attorney, when not accompanied by any transfer of the legal title.²⁹

Letters and correspondence. Letters and correspondence may constitute sufficient memoranda to satisfy the statute of frauds,³⁰ but a letter is insufficient where it is written, not by the owner of the land, but by the owner's husband,³¹ or where it does not clearly show an intention to create a trust and the terms thereof,³² or where the statement of the terms or subject matter is not sufficient.³³ So a letter which shows merely an unperformed promise to create a trust, unattended by any consideration, is insufficient;³⁴ and in some cases letters directing a disposition of the writer's property after his death have been held invalid as a testamentary disposition of property other than by will.³⁵

quirements of the statute of frauds;³⁶ but a statement of account showing merely the amount a grantee had received as rent and how he had paid it out is insufficient,³⁷ and a mere memorandum in a firm ledger on the margin of an account, not describing the land or otherwise importing a trust, is insufficient.³⁸

Wills. A trust may be sufficiently manifested in a will;³⁹ but not by an invalid will,⁴⁰ although it has been held that a will declaring by way of recital that land devised to testatrix's husband was held by her in trust for him was a sufficient declaration of trust, even though invalid as a will.⁴¹ A deed of trust incorporating portions of an invalid will, and declaring that the trustees shall hold on the same trusts as declared in the will, has been held valid;⁴² but a statute requiring an express trust in land to be created by a writing is not complied with by a mere statement in a will that it was made in accordance with a mutual agreement between testatrix and her husband, and a recital that the husband by his will gave his estate to his wife.⁴³

Pleadings and depositions. It has been held that a trust is sufficiently declared and manifested by an admission or acknowledgment by the trustee that he holds in trust, contained in a pleading,⁴⁴ either in a bill or complaint,⁴⁵ or in an answer⁴⁶ or deposition.⁴⁷ On the other hand, it has been held that an answer or deposition admitting the existence of a parol trust is insufficient where the trustee, at the same time, sets up the statute of frauds as a bar to the enforcement of the trust,⁴⁸ or where the answer or deposition is made after the trustee has divested himself of all interest in the land by an absolute deed.⁴⁹ So it has been held that the testimony of defendant, taken down in writing after the death of his brother, and in settlement of the estate, was not a written declaration of trust, even though defendant admitted therein that there was such a trust.⁵⁰

§ 40. — Execution and Delivery

Although the writing in order to satisfy the statute of frauds must generally be signed by the proper party, it is ordinarily not required to be sealed or acknowledged. Delivery of the writing is in some instances required.

In general, a deed or declaration of trust need not be under seal,⁵¹ stamped,⁵² or acknowledged,⁵³ unless the statute so requires;⁵⁴ and certainly as between the parties to the transaction an instrument creating an express trust is valid and enforceable without acknowledgment.⁵⁵ Where there is no statute of frauds specifically relating to trusts, it has been held that a declaration of trust made simultaneously with the acceptance of a legal title, although not embodied therein, does not require formal execution or acknowledgment in the absence of statute.⁵⁶

On the other hand, the different statutes of frauds generally require the writing to be signed⁵⁷ by the proper party;⁵⁸ and, where the writing is not signed, or is signed by the wrong person, it is insufficient.⁵⁹ It has been held that the signature of the trustee is sufficient without that of the cestui que trust,⁶⁰ as is the signature of the declarant without those of the beneficiaries;⁶¹ and, on the other hand, a written agreement signed by all the parties thereto except the trustee has been held binding where his signature formed no element of the consideration for the signatures of the other parties, and the writing expressly provided that it should be binding, regardless of the trustee.⁶² Since a trust may be created and declared by the same person, or it may be created by one person and declared by another,⁶³ where the statute is held not to require that the trust be both created and declared in writing, but merely that it be either created or declared in writing,⁶⁴ a writing is sufficient to satisfy the statute if it is signed by either the person who creates the trust or the person who declares it.⁶⁵

Sufficiency of signature. Whether a signature or subscription is sufficient is frequently a matter of intent and must be determined by the circumstances of the particular case.⁶⁶ Thus, the signature may consist of initials instead of being written out at length,⁶⁷ and need not be handwritten, but may be typed, lithographed, rubber-stamped, or printed.⁶⁸ Where the statute requires a signature, and not a subscription, the name of the signer need not appear at the end of the writing, but may be placed in the body.⁶⁹

Signatures to separate writings. Where the terms of a trust are collected from several writings it is not necessary that all of them be signed if they are so connected with the one that is signed that they may be identified as parts of the transaction.⁷⁰

Attesting witnesses. Under a statute so providing, the writing effecting the trust must be attested by the prescribed number and kind of witnesses.⁷¹

Delivery. While it has been broadly stated that the instrument creating the trust need not be delivered to anyone,⁷² with respect to delivery of the writing required by a statute of frauds, the question of the necessity of a delivery has been rendered unimportant in many cases by holdings that the delivery was sufficient.⁷³ The rules deducible from the remaining authorities are that, while memoranda showing the existence of a trust and found among the effects of the settlor or trustee after his death are a sufficient declaration in writing within the meaning of the statute,⁷⁴ where the declaration of trust is contained in the deed transferring the legal title, there must be a valid delivery in order to render the deed operative,⁷⁵ as in the case of deeds generally, as discussed in Deeds §§ 40-53, although there is some apparent authority to the contrary,⁷⁶ but that no delivery is necessary where the grantor is himself the trustee and the deed is recorded.⁷⁷ It has been held that, where the trust is created by a declaration of an owner of land that he holds the land in trust for another, it is not essential that the declaration be delivered to a third person.⁷⁸

The necessity of the delivery of a writing to satisfy the statute of frauds generally is discussed in Frauds, Statute of § 173.

Destruction or revocation of writing. A deed, will, or other instrument, which has been destroyed or revoked before it took effect, is not a sufficient declaration within the meaning of the statute,⁷⁹ although the existence and validity of the trust are not affected by a destruction of the instrument after it took effect.⁸⁰

Writings not denied

Where brother did not deny writing letters and subsequently conducted himself in accordance with many declarations therein contained and adopted his initials as signature, letters were sufficiently signed, although some of the initials were typewritten, within statute requiring writing instruments to be "subscribed" by trustee.—Weiner v. Mullaney, supra.

L. 141, it was held that the signature of the notary was for the single purpose of recording, not attesting, and that since the deed of trust did not meet the strict requirements of the act of 1856, supra, it was void.—In re Darr's Estate, supra.

§ 41. — Recording and Registration

While the recording of written declarations of trust may be required, the failure to record does not ordinarily invalidate the instrument as between the parties.

Under some statutes to that effect the recording of written declarations of trust is permissible or even required.⁸¹ Thus, it has been held that a loss resulting from failure to record must be borne by the person charged with the duty of having the instrument recorded.⁸² However, it has also been held that the failure to have a deed or other declaration of trust put on record does not render it void or inoperative as between the parties,⁸³ the only effect of such omission being to render the instrument void as to creditors or purchasers without notice.⁸⁴

Provisions prescribing the time within which a deed creating a trust shall be recorded and providing that if not recorded in accordance with the statute it shall be null and void should be construed as meaning that such instrument shall be voidable,⁸⁵ and that only such persons as may have been injured by the failure to record within the time prescribed should be heard to complain of such failure.⁸⁶

While it has been held that the fact that a trust instrument is not acknowledged is no excuse for failure to record it,⁸⁷ there is also some authority to the contrary.⁸⁸ The registration act does not apply to parol trusts.⁸⁹ The recording of an unproved copy of a lost deed of trust does not give constructive notice of the trust.⁹⁰

- b. Spendthrift trusts

a. In General

A sufficient declaration of trust is essential to the creation of express or voluntary trusts, which generally are created by an instrument or instruments pointing out directly and expressly the property, persons, and purpose of the trust, or by an agreement or contract expressing the intended trust.

A sufficient declaration of trust is essential to the creation of an express or voluntary trust,⁹¹ which, as discussed supra §§ 31-35, when the stat-

Of personal property

Intent

An instrument, to be a "declaration of trust," must appear to have been so intended by maker.—Pickering v. Higgins, 30 A.2d 846, 69 R.I. 22.

A trust may be made by declaration; the declaration bears the same relationship to an equitable gift which delivery bears to a legal gift.—In re Turley's Estate, 289 N.Y.S. 704, 160 Misc. 190.

"Declaration of trust"

(1) A "declaration of trust" is the act by which an individual acknowledges that property, the title to which he holds in his own name, in fact belongs to another, for whose use he holds it.—Bingen v. First Trust Co. of St. Paul, C.C.A.Minn., 103 F.2d 260—65 C.J. p 264 note 86 [a] (1).

(2) Other definition see 65 C.J. p 264 note 86 [a] (2).

Time of creation

A trust is created when no act is necessary to be done to give it effect and when the trust is fully and finally declared in the instrument creating it.—Meyer v. Pfahler, 199 N.E. 801, 362 Ill. 336.

ute so requires, must be in writing. Such trusts are generally created by an instrument or instruments pointing out directly and expressly the property, persons, and purpose of the trust,⁹² or by an agreement or contract between the parties expressing the intended trust.⁹³ The declaration must contain sufficient words to create the trust,⁹⁴ and it must

Any writing

The existence of a trust may be shown by any writing which connects the trustee with the subject matter of the trust—Clay v. Crawford, 183 S.W.2d 797, 298 Ky. 654.

Dependent on language

Whether or not a trust is created is dependent on the language of the instrument—Hobbs v. Board of Education of Northern Baptist Convention, 253 N.W. 627, 126 Neb. 416.

When trust fully declared

A trust is created when no act is necessary to be done to give it effect and when the trust is fully and finally declared in the instrument creating it—Wynekoop v. Wynekoop, 95 N.E.2d 457, 407 Ill. 219.

embody all the essential elements of a trust.⁹⁵ It must express the intention to create a trust, as discussed infra §§ 43-44, and state with certainty the terms,⁹⁶ subject,⁹⁷ persons,⁹⁸ and object⁹⁹ of the trust; and it has been stated that the trustee must be authorized and directed to perform certain duties and assume certain obligations.¹ A trust is not created unless the settlor imposes enforceable duties on the transferee.² A trust, whether of real or personal property, is created as to the trustor and beneficiary, by any words or acts of the trustor, indicating with reasonable certainty an intention on the part of the trustor to create a trust and the subject, purpose, and beneficiary of the trust.³

It has been held that the declaration of trust must have been made by the person owning the property,⁴ although there is other authority holding that a trust of real estate may be created by a writing of the grantor or may be declared in writing by the grantee.⁵ A written declaration of trust need not be addressed to anyone.⁶ It has been held that an instrument cannot constitute a trust declaration where no trust res is in existence at the time of its execution or adoption.⁷ The omission to fix the compensation of the trustee by the trust instrument does not invalidate the trust.⁸

trust.⁹ There is, however, no requirement that the settlor set forth his purpose in detail or explain why he used a trust as the vehicle of his transfer instead of some other mode.¹⁰ No purpose need be expressly stated where it is otherwise clear what was intended;¹¹ and where statutory provisions allow trusts for certain specified purposes only, as discussed supra § 25, the precise words of the statute need not be used to express it.¹² The fact that the settlor may have created the trust for reasons other than those disclosed by the trust instrument does not in itself invalidate an otherwise valid gift in trust.¹³

Creator as trustee. Where the creator of the trust selects himself trustee, a mere declaration to that effect is sufficient.¹⁴ It has been held, however, that in order for one to constitute himself a trustee of his own property, there should be some words of a conveyance, some expression of an intention to become trustee.¹⁵

Penalty provision. The failure of a trust instrument to contain a penalty provision for a breach or forfeiture of the trust by the trustees will not invalidate the trust instrument.¹⁶

Provision for termination. An express provision for the termination of the trust is not required.¹⁷

b. Spendthrift Trusts

In order that a spendthrift trust may be created, the declaration of trust must manifest a clear and undoubted intention by the creator or settlor to create such a trust.

Matters required to be shown

The "spendthrift trust" doctrine will not be extended to apply where the instrument creating the property right fails to create a trust in unmistakable terms and fails to provide for a trustee.—Sternberger v. Glenn, 137 S.W.2d 269, 175 Tenn. 644.

Power to use principal

Discretionary power of trustee to use part or all of principal of trust property for care, health, or comfort of beneficiaries was held not to preclude characterization of spendthrift trust.—Adair v. Sharp, 197 N.E. 399, 49 Ohio App. 507.

Right to occupy premises

Fact that deed creating trust for trustor's son authorized trustee to permit son to occupy premises as a home for himself upon condition that son pay trustee sums required to effect preservation of trust estate did not defeat trustor's intention to create spendthrift trust, since deed did not invest son with absolute right of possession.—*Gentemann v. ment creating the trust.¹⁹ Clear and unequivocal, or specific, language declaring the trust a spendthrift trust is required,²⁰ or, in the absence thereof, the language of the entire instrument must raise a clear inference of an intent to create such a trust and be susceptible of no other reasonable conclusion.²¹

Express language, however, is not necessary to create such a trust;²² nor is any set phraseology or technical or particular form of words required.²³ The declaration need not denominate the beneficiary a spendthrift,²⁴ give reasons for creating the trust,²⁵ contain all restrictions and qualifications incident to such a trust,²⁶ express specific restraints on alienation and anticipation,²⁷ or expressly declare that the interest of the cestui que trust shall be beyond the reach of creditors.²⁸ It is sufficient if the intention is reasonably plain on a consideration of the instrument as a whole.²⁹

It has been held usual in spendthrift trusts to find a provision against alienation of the trust fund by the voluntary act of the beneficiary, or in invitum by his creditors.³⁰ Also, it has been held that a spendthrift trust is created where there is an express provision forbidding anticipatory alienation and attachment by creditors;³¹ but there is other authority which holds that the mere incorporation of words of restriction of the power of alienation in an instrument transferring an estate for life does not operate to create a spendthrift trust.³²

The court cannot rewrite an invalid instrument so as to create a valid spendthrift trust.³³ There

b. Necessity for particular formality or technical language

a. In General

The declaration of trust must clearly manifest an intention to create a trust in order that an express or voluntary trust may be created.

In general, in order to create an express or voluntary trust the declaration of trust must manifest an intention so to do by the settlor or transferor of the property.³⁸ The intention, in the absence of a statute providing otherwise, may properly be manifested by written or spoken words or by conduct³⁹ considered in some instances in connec-

 Manifestation of intention to create trust is the external expression of such intention as distinguished from an undisclosed intention—O'Connor v. Burns, Potter & Co., 36 N.W.2d 507, 151 Neb. 9.
 Courts look to the intent of the parties—Peole v. LeRoy, 22 S.E.2d 214, 222 N.C. 123.
 It is enough that the creator of a trust uses language sufficient to show his intention—In re Schwedler's Trust, 113 N.Y.S.2d 306.

 The intention of grantor to create a trust, not revealed to grantee at time of conveyance and of which grantee knows nothing, is not sufficient to create a trust—Flanagan v. Herrett, 178 So. 147, 130 Fla. 531.
 Fact of delivery of declaration of trust to beneficiary alone does not supply inadequacy of the declaration as a sufficient disclosure of an intention to create a trust—Bodley v. Jones, 32 A.2d 436, 27 Del. Ch. 273.

(2) Plaintiffs' transfer of realty encumbered by trust deeds to defendant under agreement giving defendant irrevocable power to sell, lease, or otherwise dispose thereof, and to use proceeds to pay the encumbrances, created a voluntary trust and made defendant a trustee and not a mere mortgagee in possession notwithstanding defendant's letter constituting part of agreement stated that defendant declined to enter into any trust agreement.—Neel v. Barnard, 150 P.2d 177, 24 Cal.2d 406.

(3) Landowner's agreement conveying legal title to property to trustee or his successor for period of years, and imposing on trustee and successor burden of leasing or renting land and collecting rents therefrom and making annual payments to grantors of pro rata share of net proceeds, created valid active trust.—Schmidt v. Schmidt, Tex.Civ.App., 261 S.W.2d 892.

(4) A writing drawn by bank and entitled "declaration of trust," naming settlor and another as trustees for life to hold money deposited in bank checking account in trust for that there be a definite,⁴⁶ unequivocal,⁴⁷ explicit⁴⁸ | declaration of trust, or circumstances which show their son, and reciting that no other agreement existed was sufficient to establish a trust for the benefit of the named son, even though the instrument failed to provide for the contingency of the beneficiary's death prior to the death of the trustees.—*Albert v. with reasonable certainty⁴⁹ or beyond a reasonable doubt⁵⁰ that a trust was intended to be created. The declaration must show a desire to pass benefits through the medium of a trust and not through some related or similar instrumentality.⁵¹

The expression of intention, however, is sufficient if the language used shows the intention to create a trust,⁵² even though the creator of the trust calls it something else⁵³ or does not call it anything,⁵⁴ or even though the parties may not understand what a trust is;⁵⁵ and any words which indicate with sufficient certainty an intention to create a trust will be effective for that purpose.⁵⁶ If the other essential requisites of an express trust exist and the intent to hold or deal with the property for the benefit of another appears, a trust will be created.⁵⁷

When words unnecessary

The nature and terms of a transaction may give rise to an express trust and no formality of words is necessary if the unequivocal intent of the party can be determined from the attending circumstances.—Crech v. Crech, 24 S.E.2d 642, 222 N.C. 656.

Other interpretation impossible

(1) In order that a trust may be implied from a transaction, the acts must be such as admit of no other interpretation than that the creator retained no legal rights over the property, and the inference arising from the acts must be plain that either the settlor constituted another trustee, or else that he held the property himself as trustee.—O'Keefe v. Equitable Trust Co., C.C.A.N.J., 103 F.2d 904.

(2) Where reliance is placed on acts alone, those acts must be so clear as not to be capable of another construction or consistent with a different intention.—In re Skuse's Estate, 1 N.Y.S.2d 202, 165 Misc. 554.

Partners handling money for others

Whether partners are debtors or trustees for their clients in handling money, managing properties, and other activities depends on relations of parties and their intentions, to be ascertained from their words and conduct in light of all circumstances.—Boss v. Hardee, 103 F.2d 751, 70 App. D.C. 50.

Gift or contract

The creation of a parol trust in personal property requires the expression of an intention to create a trust and not to make a present gift or a bilateral contract.—Gribbel v. Gribbel, 17 A.2d 892, 341 Pa. 11.

Motive for gift

A donor's expression of motive or reason for gift does not ordinarily prove that donee was intended to hold gift in trust for another.—In re Evans' Estate, 93 A.2d 683, 372 Pa. 284.

52. U.S.—King v. Richardson, C.C.A. N.C., 136 F.2d 849, certiorari denied 64 S.Ct. 91, 320 U.S. 777, 88 L.Ed. 466.

Sufficiency

(1) It is enough that settlor's intent to create trust is clearly manifested.—Mahaffey v. Helvering, C.C. A. 8, 140 F.2d 879.

(2) It is sufficient to create a trust where the intention is clearly established and its object distinctly manifested.—Clay v. Crawford, 183 S.W.2d 797, 298 Ky. 654.

Transfer of beneficial interest

A trust intended to be created at present moment, comes into existence, and beneficial title to trust property passes to beneficiary, on mere manifestation of donor's will.—Eagles Building & Loan Ass'n v. Fiducia, 37 A.2d 116, 135 N.J.Eq. 7, affirmed 40 A.2d 627, 136 N.J.Eq. 117.

Appropriate instrumentality

The law will hold that a trust exists where, in view of a sufficiently manifested purpose or intent, that is the appropriate instrumentality.—Douglas' Will, 89 N.Y.S.2d 498, 195 Misc. 661.

Whatever evinces intention of party that property of which he is legal owner is beneficially another's is sufficient.—Burns v. Bastien, 50 P.2d 377, 174 Okl. 40.

Court will support intention

Wherever an intention to create a trust can be fairly collected from the language of the instrument and the terms employed, such intention will be supported by the court.—Stowell v. Satorius, 109 N.E.2d 734, 413 Ill. 482.—Goldstein v. Handley, 60 N.E.2d 851, 390 Ill. 118.

Words imposing duties

An intent to create a trust may be found in words of grantor imposing duties on grantee to hold or act for benefit of another.—Cooke v. U.S., D.C.Hawaii, 115 F.Supp. 830, mo-

The expression of intention to hold the legal title of property for the benefit of another necessarily implies the intention to create a trust,⁵⁸ and creates a trust where founded on valuable consideration.⁵⁹

An expression of intent alone, however, is not enough to create a trust.⁶⁰ Some act evidencing the intention is essential;⁶¹ the intention must be accompanied by acts or steps bringing the trust into existence.⁶² The intention shown must be an intention to create a present trust, or a trust in praesenti,⁶³ and an expression of a mere intention or agreement to create a trust at some future time is insufficient.⁶⁴ A trust is not created by a mere tion to dismiss denied, C.A., U. S. v. Cooke, 215 F.2d 528.

Charge or trust

As general rule, where property is transferred to another subject to payment of certain sum to third person, equitable charge and not trust is created, but if transferor manifests intention to impose duty on transferee to deal with property for benefit of third person and to give third person beneficial interest therein, trust is created.—*Dahlke v. 61. Ark.—Kansas City Life Ins. Co. v. Taylor, 43 S.W.2d 372, 184 Ark. 772.

Primary consideration

In determining whether an express trust has been created, the primary consideration is the intention of the settlor or creator.—St. Louis Uniform Firemen's Credit Union v. Halsey, Mo.App., 190 S.W.2d 626.

Determinative factor

(1) Whether or not a trust has been created in any given case is, in the last analysis, a question of intention.—Kozłowska v. Napierkowski, 170 A. 193, 165 Md. 620.

(2) In determining whether or not a trust exists the controlling factor is the manifestation by the parties of an intention that a trust be created.—Levy v. Levy, 35 N.E.2d 659, 309 Mass. 486.

(3) Equity needs only to ascertain the intention of the creator of the trust.—Hamsey v. City of Brookfield, 237 S.W.2d 143, 361 Mo. 557.

At time of creation

In determining the existence of a trust, the intention of the parties at the time the trust is alleged to have been created controls.—Kozłowska v. Napierkowski, 170 A. 193, 165 Md. 620.

62. U.S.—Cullen v. Chappell, C.C.A. Conn., 116 F.2d 1017.

Intest, without acts, is of no effect with respect to creation of a trust.—Lewis v. Jackson & Squire, D.C. Ark., 86 F.Supp. 354, appeal dismissed, C.A., 181 F.2d 1011, Lewis v. Midwest Min. Co., 181 F.2d 1011, and Lewis v. F. S. Neeley Co., 181 F.2d 1011.

Consummation of intent required

The act creating a trust must be consummated and not rest in mere intention, and it must appear from written or oral declaration, nature of transaction, relationship of the parties, and purpose of the gift that the fiduciary relationship is completely established.—Warner v. Burlington Federal Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 49 A.2d 92, 114 Vt. 463, 168 A.L.R. 1266.

Direct and positive action

A special or technical trust arises from the direct and positive action of the parties evidenced by written instrument, words expressed, or both.—Schueck v. Reiter, 23 N.E.2d 714, 372 Ill. 328.

Necessity for legal liability

Declaration of intention to create trust is unenforceable and revocable without legal liability.—Newell v. Capelle, D.C. Del., 14 F.Supp. 147, affirmed, C.C.A., 86 F.2d 1007.

Promise to create trust

(1) Declarations of a purpose to create a trust, or mere voluntary unfulfilled promises to give property to a person or persons, or to dispose of it in the future for the benefit of such person or persons are not sufficient to create a trust, nor is a mere intention or mere voluntary agreement to create a trust, where the owner of the property contemplates some further action by him to make it effectual, sufficient to establish a trust.—Hansen v. Hansen, 171 P.2d 392, 110 Utah 222.

(2) A promise to create a trust in the future is enforceable, if the requirements for an enforceable contract are complied with.—Lewis v. Jackson & Squire, D.C. Ark., 86 F.Supp. 354, appeal dismissed, C.A., 181 F.2d 1011, Lewis v. Midwest Min. Co., 181 F.2d 1011, and Lewis v. F. S. Neeley Co., 181 F.2d 1011.

(3) If a person declares his intention or promises that he will at a subsequent time transfer property then owned or thereafter to be acquired by him to another person in trust, no trust arises until he makes the transfer in trust.—Lewis v. Jack- intent, at some time, to convey or devise lands to certain persons,⁶⁵ or where property is transferred to a person to be disposed of by him in any manner or to any person he may select,⁶⁶ or if the transferor manifests an intention to give the property to the transferee for his own benefit,⁶⁷ or if the words and circumstances are as consistent with another form of undertaking as with that of a trust.⁶⁸

Payment of interest. A provision in the trust instrument for the payment of interest by the trustee does not necessarily show an intent not to create a trust.⁶⁹

b. Necessity for Particular Formality or Technical Language

The mere form of the instrument, or the use or non-

use of particular or technical words, is not alone determinative of whether or not a trust was created, although the use of technical words is important and constitutes evidence of an intention to create a trust.

The mere form of the instrument,⁷⁰ or the use or nonuse of technical words⁷¹ is not alone determinative of whether or not a trust was created. The transaction itself must be scrutinized.⁷² Although there must be something equivalent to an express statement,⁷³ a trust estate may be created by implication,⁷⁴ and definite⁷⁵ or express⁷⁶ words are not necessary. Formal or technical language is not required;⁷⁷ and, unless otherwise required by statute,⁷⁸ no special or particular words,⁷⁹ and no par-

(4) Although a promise to create a trust in the future does not create a present trust, a present trust may be created of the rights of a promisee under the contract to create a trust.—McClendon v. Dean, 117 P.2d 250, 45 N.M. 496.

(5) Where a person purports to create a present trust of property to be acquired in the future, the transaction may be considered as in effect a promise to create a trust when the property is acquired, and, if there is a binding promise to transfer after-acquired property to another as a trustee, a trust may be immediately created, not of the after-acquired property but of the rights arising out of the contract.—McClendon v. Dean, supra.

(6) If a person receives consideration for his promise to create a trust, he may incur a liability upon the promise if he fails to perform it, and a court of equity may specifically enforce the promise.—McClendon v. Dean, supra.

Absolute transfer

A transfer may be held to be a gift in trust even if language, from its surface appearance, has indicated an absolute gift to donee, if it is followed by instructions to the donee to use the property for benefit of certain third parties.—Jaiser v. Mulligan, D.C.Neb., 120 F.Supp. 599.

Any oral or written declaration, however informal, evidencing intention to create trust with sufficient clearness is sufficient, and it may be implied from words and acts.—In re Frank's Estate, 275 N.Y.S. 843, 163 Misc. 688.

sufficiently expressed.⁸¹ Express trusts may be recognized and enforced which have not been directly and expressly declared, but which are inferred from the circumstances by a construction of all the

Personal property

(2) The facts as found from which the intention to create a trust is to be determined must be considered—McCabe v. Grantham, 31 N.E.2d 658, 108 Ind.App. 695.

Question involved

The question is not whether draftsman was thinking in terms of a technical trust nor whether he was attempting to give any particular name or label to the relationship being created, but whether settlor manifested an intention to impose on a transferee of the property equitable duties to deal with property for the benefit of another person.—In re Bab-bage's Estate, 106 N.Y.S.2d 332, 201 Misc. 750.

Reservation in deed

Statement in deed conveying realty with reservation of three-fourths interest in royalties of oil and gas that such reservation of royalties should belong to grantor and two other named persons, share and share alike, was held to constitute an executed express trust in favor of parties named therein as beneficiaries.—Burns v. Bastion, 50 P.2d 377, 174 Okl. 40.

Terminology

The existence of a trust does not depend on the terminology used—Hugo v. Hugo, 91 N.E.2d 826, 325 Mass. 612.

Writing for other purpose

Writing declaring trust need not have been made for that purpose.

incorporating the word trust such as "trust fund,"⁸⁸ or equivalent words,⁸⁷ if the creation of a trust is otherwise sufficiently evident;⁸⁸ and their absence does not prevent a declaration of trust from being sufficient.⁸⁹ On the other hand, the use of such words is not conclusive of an intention to create a trust, and does not necessarily, and will not of itself be sufficient to, create a trust.⁹⁰

The use of formal or technical words, however, is important in determining whether or not a trust was intended,⁹¹ and it is a circumstance to be considered in determining whether a trust was created.⁹² The fact that such words are used is evidence of an intention to create a trust,⁹³ and their absence is significant where it is claimed that a trust was created.⁹⁴ The word "trustee," following a grantee's name in an instrument, has been held to evidence the existence of a trust, and not to be merely descriptio personae,⁹⁵ although it does not, by itself, create a trust;⁹⁶ but there is other authority holding that such a use of the word "trustee" in a deed of conveyance is mere surplusage or descriptio personae, and the grantee takes the title for his own use where no trust is declared and no beneficiary named.⁹⁷ The trustee may be called

Purpose of statute

Statute providing that deeds in which the words "trustee" or "as trustee" are added to the name of grantee shall be treated as granting a fee-simple estate under certain conditions was intended to prevent secret trusts and to convey the beneficial title to the grantee along with legal title in order to prevent fraud being perpetrated on persons who might subsequently rely on the record when dealing with grantee.—Arundel Dubenture Corp. v. § 44. — Precatory Words

Precatory or recommendatory words will be sufficient to create an express or voluntary trust where, and only where, it clearly appears that such was the intention of the donor or settlor and the trust is otherwise sufficiently declared.

Precatory or recommendatory words may or may not be sufficient to create an express or voluntary trust.¹ Each case must be considered separately, and whether or not a trust has been created by precatory words must be determined on the basis of the facts thereof and the guides and tests generally applicable in determining the force and effect of precatory words.² Such words will create a trust where, and only where, it clearly appears that such was the intention of the settlor.³ Of themselves, such words are insufficient.⁴ A mere expression of a wish,⁵ such as expressions of a wish, desire, or recommendation that the transferee of property should use or dispose of it in a specified manner,⁶ is not enough.

An intention to impose enforceable duties on the transferee is essential to the creation of an express or voluntary trust, as discussed supra § 42 a; and the intention not to impose enforceable duties may be shown by the use of precatory words rather than mandatory words,⁷ or by the fact that the purposes

Situations in which doctrine applicable

Although the doctrine of precatory trusts is applied in most cases in situations where an apparent absolute gift is made to one person and followed by the expression of a desire or request that it be used for the benefit of another, it is not confined to such situations, and is also applicable in cases where a gift is made to an individual or institution with a request that it be used in a given manner or for a suggested purpose.—Bankers Trust Co. v. Provisions held not precatory

Where father created trust with income payable to himself during his life and thereafter to his children and with direction for division of principal on termination of trust, provisions that, if a deceased child had not made will complying with trust agreement, his share of property should go to surviving children or descendants of any who might have died, could not be regarded as precatory and were not made nugatory because they created a condition subsequent.—Linahan v. Precatory or recommendatory words will not be sufficient to create a trust where the donor shows an intention to leave the property absolutely.¹⁴ Hence, a precatory trust will not be created where the writing imports a grant of absolute ownership to the donee and there are additional words expressing the donor's wish as to the use or disposition of the property;¹⁵ and indefinite and unsatisfactory ex-

Mandatory character of words

In order to create an enforceable "trust," the words of the testator must be construed as mandatory.—Newland v. McNeill, 126 S.W.2d 127, 277 Ky. 245.

As certain as ordinary language

Precatory words, in order to create an express trust, must show an intention to create an express trust as surely as though the trust were declared in the ordinary manner.

Sufficient words to raise it is a prerequisite to the establishment of a valid trust.—Magnant v. Peacock, 25 So.2d 566, 157 Fla. 271.

Test

(1) The real test is whether the language used is imperative or leaves the use and disposition of the property to the discretion of the donee.—King v. Richardson, C.C.A.N.C. 136 P.2d 849, certiorari denied 64 S.Ct. 91, 320 U.S. 777, 88 L.Ed. 466.

use to be made of the trust,²³ the purpose,²⁴ the objects to be attained thereby,²⁵ and the time of termination of the trust.²⁶

If the language is so vague, general, or equivocal that any of the necessary elements of the trust are not described with certainty, a trust will not be created.²⁷ It cannot arise from loose and equivocal expressions,²⁸ or from loose statements admitting possible inferences consistent with other relationships.²⁹ It is not necessary, however, that the declaration express every element so clearly that nothing can be left to inference or implication,³⁰ it being sufficient if the donor's general intent and the objects thereof are ascertainable by the tribunal provided for that purpose;³¹ and where the trust instrument itself provides a definite test whereby the obscurity may reasonably be made certain, the trust is not void.³²

b. Subject Matter or Property

The declaration must describe the subject matter or property embraced in the trust with reasonable certainty.

Facts at time of creation

The subject matter of a trust must be definite or definitely ascertainable from the facts existing at the time of the creation of the trust.—Smith v. Deshaw, 78 A.2d 479, 116 Vt. 441.

"Something"

It is not sufficient to ascertain merely that the testator intended the beneficiaries to have "something" under the trust.—Tucker v. Countryman, 111 N.E.2d 301, 414 Ill. 215.

Time of conveyance

The rule, with respect to the need for certainty of description of land, applies where the declaration of trust is made before the conveyance of the land; where the declaration is made after the conveyance, a reference to the conveyance sufficiently identifies the land in question.—Porter v. Laue, Wash., 267 P.2d 1064.

beneficiaries must be expressly named⁴² or so designated or described as to be capable of identification,⁴³ or of being ascertained.⁴⁴ It is sufficient, however, if the language used clearly points out the beneficiaries⁴⁵ or if they are designated with reasonable certainty,⁴⁶ or if they are made sufficiently certain that the proper court can determine them.⁴⁷

eficiaries must all be named, or in existence, or known at the time of the creation of the trust.⁵⁰ A trust is valid although the beneficiaries are left to be determined by the will of the settlor.⁵¹ Certainty as to all beneficiaries of a trust is not essential to its validity as long as it is certain as to some, since as to those it will be held valid, although not as to the uncertain ones.⁵² A trust conferring on the trustee ample power to determine the beneficiaries thereof has been held not uncertain.⁵³ A trust leaving to the discretion of the trustee the selection of beneficiaries from a certain class is valid,⁵⁴ even though he has discretion to exclude some members of the class altogether.⁵⁵

Alternative beneficiaries. A trust for the benefit of certain persons, or either of them, has been held void for uncertainty;⁵⁶ but a trust for the benefit of certain persons "or their heirs" has been held valid on the basis that "or" will be construed as "and."⁵⁷

Unincorporated associations. A trust for an unincorporated association and the use and benefit of the members thereof, without stating who the members are, has been held too uncertain as to the beneficiaries,⁵⁸ unless it is contemplated at the time that the association will, and subsequently does, become incorporated.⁵⁹ However, there is no uncertainty as to the beneficiaries of a trust for a joint stock association where the shares of the members are transferable only on the books of the association.⁶⁰

the beneficiary,⁶³ where the amounts, if any, which the beneficiaries are to receive are wholly discretionary with the alleged trustee, the trust is too uncertain to be enforceable,⁶⁴ and there is no property which can be the subject matter of a trust, where its application to the purposes of the trust depends on the absolute and unconditional discretion of the person in control of the property.⁶⁵ However, a trust leaving to the discretion of the trustee the determination of the proportion or amount the beneficiaries shall receive has been held valid and enforceable as long as the trustee must divide the property to the class designated.⁶⁶

Respective interests need not be designated where there are several beneficiaries, as it is presumed they take equal interests, so that the trust is not uncertain.⁶⁷ It is not essential that a beneficiary should have the entire beneficial interest or that the extent of the interest of the beneficiary be definite or definitely ascertainable at the time of the creation of the trust.⁶⁸

e. Manner of Performance

In an express or voluntary trust the declaration of trust must show with certainty the manner in which the trust is to be performed.

The requisite of certainty in the declaration of trust, as discussed supra subdivision a of this section, includes certainty as to the manner in which the trust is to be performed.⁶⁹ The rights and duties of the parties must be defined.⁷⁰ It is not necessary, however, that all the details of the management and execution of the trust be specified,⁷¹ or that remote contingencies be provided against,⁷² and the fact that the ultimate disposition of the property is uncertain does not invalidate the trust.⁷³ It is sufficient if the language used clearly points out the disposition to be made of the property⁷⁴ or if the general scheme of the trust is made sufficiently clear that the proper court can judicially determine it and superintend the execution of the trust.⁷⁵

It is not essential to the validity of the trust that the power and duties of the trustee be enumerated in

Method of transfer

Under deed in trust reserving to grantor power to convey the property by "absolute deed or by mortgage", if quoted words could be construed as limiting grantor to such two methods and as precluding grantor from executing a subsequent deed in trust or a will, the purported trust would be void for uncertainty.—*Boeker v. detail.⁷⁶ Literal directions to collect income and disburse it to a named beneficiary are not necessary to the creation of a valid trust.⁷⁷ The benefits provided for need not be absolute and payable in all events in order to make the trust valid, but it is sufficient if the contingency is one that probably might occur.⁷⁸ Broad discretion may be given the trustee.⁷⁹ The donor or settlor may leave the trustee a wide discretion as to the mode of realizing the end sought.⁸⁰ However, where the settlor declares himself trustee for another, he need not declare the duties, implied by law, devolving on him as trustee in order that the terms of the trust be not uncertain.⁸¹

Reversion

(1) The reservation of a reversion is not inconsistent with the creation of a trust to continue until the death of the reversioner.—Scholtz v. Central Hanover Bank & Trust Co., 68 N.E.2d 503, 295 N.Y. 488.—Doctor v. Hughes, 122 N.E. 221, 225 N.Y.

While the necessity for consideration depends on whether the trust is executed or executory, as discussed supra § 28, consideration need not be recited in the declaration of trust.⁸² Such words as "contemplation of marriage" need not be expressed in the instrument.⁸³

§ 47. Reservations and Conditions

In a proper case the settlor in an express or voluntary trust may reserve to himself various rights and powers, without invalidating the trust.

The fact that the settlor, in creating the trust, makes certain reservations, does not in itself affect the validity of the declaration.⁸⁴ Thus, in a proper case, he may, without invalidating the trust, reserve an estate or interest in the trust property.⁸⁵ He may reserve to himself a beneficial interest in the property for his life,⁸⁶ such as a reservation to himself

(2) In order to transform into a remainder that which would ordinarily be a reversion, the intention to work the transformation must be clearly expressed.—Scholtz v. Central Hanover Bank & Trust Co., supra.—Doctor v. Hughes, supra.—Julier v. Central Hanover Bank & Trust Co., supra.

(3) A trust instrument directing trustees to pay principal, after deaths of settlor and his wife, to settlor's children and his deceased children's descendants, or, if none, to settlor's then next of kin, did not express intent to create remainder with sufficient clarity to overcome prima facie precept of construction that a reservation to the settlor's heirs or next of kin is equivalent to the reservation of a reversion to the settlor himself.—Julier v. Central Hanover Bank & Trust Co., supra.

Possibility of reverter

Discretion

Where settlor reserved right to dip into principal or corpus for his support and provided that his discretion as to what was a proper expenditure for his support could not be questioned, settlor's discretion as to what was proper expenditure for his support, could not be questioned, except possibly in case of abuse of discretion, but any expenditure of trust property, however extravagant, would have to be confined to his support, and he would have no right to give it away or to use it for other purposes.—Smith v. Deshaw, 78 A.2d 479, 116 Vt. 441.

Extent of right

The right reserved in trust indenture to "use" securities, money, personally and choses in action necessarily implies the right to employ, invest, expend, and alienate such property as desired in any manner.—Atlantic Nat. Existence of power of appointment

The existence of a general power of appointment, the exercise of which would defeat provisions for distribution of the trust property in default of appointment, does not make the trust property the property of the settlor.—National Shawmut Bank of Boston v. Joy, 53 N.E.2d 113, 315 Mass. 457.

87-91, he may reserve the power to modify or revoke the trust, or to revoke a gift to a beneficiary.⁹⁸

Generally, such reservations are construed to be conditions subsequent,⁹⁹ and where the settlor never exercises the powers reserved, the interests of the beneficiaries are present and subsisting at the time of his death and they are entitled to have the trust administered according to its terms.¹ Even though

Collier, 162 So. 868, 120 Fla. 248.

Redelivery of property to trustor

(1) Reserved power in trust instrument to require redelivery of bonds to trustor if trustee died before execution of trust, or prior thereto at pleasure of trustor was construed to refer to administration of trust and not to revocation of trust, where bonds were subject to consummation of trust by which beneficial interest in principal of bonds passed to designated beneficiaries.—Williams v. Collier, supra.

(2) Words "this instrument shall become inoperative" within trust instrument providing that in event of death of trustee before execution of trust or prior thereto at pleasure of trustor such instrument shall become inoperative and bonds shall be returned to trustor was held to refer to contingent termination of administration of trust by named trustee and not to discontinuance of trust, where trust was completely created and bonds to be delivered were ex-

Reinvestment

Power reserved to settlor to pass on securities purchased for reinvestment will not invalidate trust, where the trustee otherwise had full discretion including full power to sell any and all property constituting the trust funds.—City Bank Farmers' Trust Co. v. Charity Organization Soc. of City of New York, 265 N.Y.S. 267, 238 App.Div. 720, affirmed 191 N.E. 504, 264 N.Y. 441.

Right to veto investments

A settlor's reservation of power to veto investments by trustee did not constitute the trustee a mere agent and prevent title from passing to the trustee or render the trust executory.—Cleveland Trust Co. v. White, 16 N.E.2d 588, 58 Ohio App. 339.

Ohio.—Cleveland Trust Co. v. White, 16 N.E.2d 627, 134 Ohio St. 1, 118 A.L.R. 475.

Particular conditions

Provisions of trust instrument that in event of death of trustee before execution of trust or at any time prior thereto, at trustor's option, instrument should become inoperative and the trust property should be returned to trustor, were "conditions subsequent" which did not divest trustee of title.—Williams v. Collier, 162 So. 815, 120 Fla. 248, rehearing denied 162 So. 868, 120 Fla. 248.

1. U.S.—United Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Garrett, D.C.Ark., 64 F.Supp. 460.

the donor has reserved the right to enjoy the income from an irrevocable trust, it is nevertheless a completed transfer.² The fact that there may be no portion of the trust property left for the beneficiaries to receive, by reason of the settlor's exercise of his reserved right to use or dispose of it, does not render the declaration invalid.³ The reservation of the power of control over the trust property does not invest the trustor or donor with control over the economic benefits or income from the trust property.⁴

Where, however, the settlor retains powers which in their cumulative effect amount to ownership of the trust estate with such control over the administrative functions of the trustee as to make of him simply the settlor's agent or representative, no trust is established.⁵ In determining whether the powers reserved by the settlor are so great as to negate an intent to create any present interest in the beneficiaries, factors to be considered are the formality of the transaction,⁶ and the combination of reservations.⁷

Express words. In an inter vivos trust, a power reserved to a grantor, it has been held, must be by express words of reservation.⁸

Conditions. A settlor may validly impose conditions on the use of the trust property after his death.⁹ A declaration of trust, to take effect on the happening of certain conditions, does not become operative if such conditions never occur.¹⁰

Restraint on alienation. Provisions in a trust instrument prohibiting the alienation or mortgage of the trust property are valid under certain circumstances,¹¹ but a provision prohibiting incumbering the property is invalid and unenforceable where there is no penalty or forfeiture provided for its violation,¹² although such a provision is waived by the execution of incumbrances by the only persons who can complain of the breach.¹³

§ 48. Use of Several Instruments

An express or voluntary trust may be declared by means of several instruments or writings.

When trust may be questioned

Validity of trust may be questioned where settlor declares himself trustee but reserves power and right to withdraw, consume, or dispose of principal or corpus of trust property, but where settlor's right to use principal is restricted to use for settlor's support, trust is not testamentary, and, where restriction is so confined, of trust be contained in, or endorsed on, the instrument which transfers the legal title to the property,¹⁵ or, where the property is described in the conveyance, that it be described in the declaration of trust.¹⁶ Although it has been held that the declaration of a trust must be contemporaneous with a deed,¹⁷ it has also been held that the writings need not be contemporaneous,¹⁸ or inter partes.¹⁹ Contemporaneous instruments may be a sufficient declaration of trust if, when construed together, they show the intent to create a trust.²⁰ A trust declaration resting on a contemporaneously executed void deed is void.²¹

§ 49. Construction

The construction of a declaration of trust is a matter of law and should be based on a consideration of the whole instrument or instruments, and the facts and circumstances of the case, and should give effect to the intent of the parties.

The construction of a declaration or acknowledgment of trust is a matter of law.²³

Whether a trust is declared by a particular instrument depends on the construction to be placed on that instrument,²⁴ which, where it is clear and unambiguous, is deduced from the language thereof.²⁵ Regard will be had to the provisions of the instrument as expressed,²⁶ and the instrument or instruments will be considered in the light of the surrounding facts and circumstances;²⁷ and whether or not a trust relationship arises from a particular transaction is to be determined from a written agreement entered into, plus the acts and declarations of the parties.²⁸

The whole instrument is to be considered.²⁹ and

Transferor's language

Whether or not a transfer intended to give property in trust or for the transferor's own benefit is determined by an interpretation of the transferor's language in the light of all the circumstances—Townsend v. Gordon, 14 N.W.2d 57, 308 Mich. 438, 151 A.L.R. 1432.

Particular circumstances

In construing writing in Norwegian language from Norwegian in the United States to relatives in Norway which was relied on as declaration of trust, court would view instrument in light of facts that writer was not native of United States, that he prided himself in carrying out details of his own affairs, was suspicious of lawyers, and did not depend on them in his own business—Bingen v. First Trust Co. of St. Paul, C.C.A. Minn., 103 F.2d 260.

Fact question

Whether a trust has been perfectly created is largely question of fact, and court in determining fact will give efficacy to situation and relation of parties, nature and situation of property, and purposes and objects which settlor had in view—Wyse v. Puchner, 51 N.W.2d 38, 260 Wis. 365.

28. Cal—People v. Pierce, 243 P.2d 585, 110 Cal.App.2d 698.

Not limited to writings

The determination of the intention is not limited to a construction of the writing; this is particularly true in the criminal field since the prosecution is not bound by any such contract—People v. Pierce, supra.

29. U.S.—Bingen v. First Trust Co. of St. Paul, D.C. Minn., 23 F.Supp

its various parts compared;³⁰ and where there are several instruments or writings, they are to be considered and taken together.³¹ Words are to be construed according to their natural meaning.³² In determining whether or not a writing creates an express trust the court is not permitted to speculate, guess, or surmise as to the meaning of the instruments and relationship of the parties.³³ The fact that the declaration is open to more than one interpretation and requires judicial construction does not defeat the trust.³⁴

The court must give effect to the true intent of the parties,³⁵ which is to be gathered from the general purpose and scope of the instrument or instruments.³⁶ Where an intention to create a trust is manifest, that intention should not be nullified by construction if there is any way in which it can be sustained.³⁷ Where construction is necessary, the practical interpretation given the declaration by the parties themselves is entitled to great weight,³⁸ and many times is controlling.³⁹ However, an instrument may be construed as creating a trust, although it expressly states it is not to be so construed.⁴⁰ Thus, an agreement of the parties to an instrument that it shall constitute a present sale and not be construed as a transfer of property in trust cannot change the true character of the agreement of the parties as disclosed by the instrument which evidences the transaction.⁴¹

Formalism not controlling

In creation of trusts, settlors are not handicapped by formalism, but rather courts of equity will seek to find real meaning of language used by settlors and construe it to indicate a trust intent if legal incidents of a trust were desired, no matter how clumsy or unsuitable the phrase used.—McClendon v. Execution

The word "execution" as used in a trust indenture embraces the actual signing and formal delivery of trust instruments and also embraces the actual carrying out and administration of the trust, and word must be given that meaning which trustor intended it to have as indicated by context—Petition of Tuckerman, 60 N.Y.S.2d 734.

veyance or transfer absolute in form⁴⁹ may be held to have been made in trust and the grantee may be held to be a trustee, where the prior or contemporaneous acts, declarations, and agreements of the parties evidence an intent and understanding that the grantee was to take and hold the property for a trust purpose. It is not permissible, however, for one who has made an absolute conveyance of property to fasten a trust thereon by his own subsequent acts and declarations alone,⁵⁰ although such subsequent acts and declarations are sometimes considered in connection with prior and contemporaneous ones in determining whether or not a trust exists.⁵¹ While there is no objection to the grantee subsequently declaring that he holds in trust,⁵² it has been held that statements made by a grantee to third persons, not agents or representatives of the grantor, to the effect that the grantee would hold the property subject to a trust do not create a trust enforceable against the grantee.⁵³ An intention to create a trust must exist,⁵⁴ and such intention must be communicated to the grantee.⁵⁵ Within the meaning of the rules just stated, the facts and circumstances surrounding many absolute conveyances have been held insufficient to disclose a trust.⁵⁶

c. Conveyances Containing Reservations, Conditions, or Other Provisions Indicating Trust

An express trust may be created by a deed or other transfer containing conditions, reservations, or other provisions sufficiently indicating an intention that the title shall be held in trust.

d. Settlor Constituting Himself Trustee

A person may create a trust in his own personal or real property by constituting himself a trustee thereof.

It is not essential in all cases that the creator of a trust shall constitute a third person trustee and transfer the legal title to him;⁶⁵ one may create a trust in his own personal property by constituting himself trustee,⁶⁶ where his words or acts clearly and unequivocally denote an intention to hold henceforth as trustee for the benefit of another,⁶⁷ even in the absence of a consideration.⁶⁸ It has been held or recognized that the owner of real property may constitute himself a trustee in respect thereof for the benefit of another,⁶⁹ at least where the dec-

by constitutes himself an express trustee—Eldridge v. Logan, Mo. App., 217 S.W.2d 588.

(2) Owner of personal property may, by oral or written declaration without consideration, declare himself trustee of the property for a beneficiary—In re Barnes' Estate, Ohio Com.Pl., 108 N.E.2d 88, affirmed 108 N.E.2d 101.

Particular agreements or transactions

(1) A creditor's gift of the principal of a note which was made payable to the donee but which creditor retained for purpose of collecting interest established trust of which the note was the subject, the creditor was the trustee, and the donee was the beneficiary—Cooley v. Cooley, 182 So. 202, 132 Fla. 716.

(2) A person procuring shares of stock or other property to be put in his name as trustee for another sufficiently manifests intention to create trust, if such is his intention, and such fact is some proof of that intention—Eagles Building & Loan Ass'n v. Fiducia, 37 A.2d 116, 135 N.J.Eq. 7, affirmed 40 A.2d 627, 136 N.J.Eq. 117.

(3) The purchase of a certificate of deposit in a bank in the name of the purchaser "for" her son, and payable to "herself or order," which certificate is retained in the purchaser's possession until her death, creates a tentative trust for the benefit of the son which, if unrevoked during the purchaser's lifetime, becomes vested at her death—Nace v. Fulton County Nat. Bank, 79 Pa.Dist. & Co. 326.

laration of trust is supported by a consideration.⁷⁰ There is also authority for the view that an effective trust in land may be created in the absence of a valuable consideration,⁷¹ but the view has been taken that an executory agreement, without consideration to hold one's land in trust, is not enforceable.⁷²

While, in respect of personal property, the view has been expressed that title must pass from the owner as an individual,⁷³ since the nature and effect of a transaction of this character are such that the legal title remains in the donor for the benefit of the donee, no transfer or assignment of the legal title is necessary,⁷⁴ or, as sometimes stated, the declaration of trust is regarded in a court of equity as the equivalent of the actual transfer of the legal interest.⁷⁵ So also, while it has been recognized that a person who has legal title to land may formally transfer it to himself as trustee,⁷⁶ there is apparently authority for the view that even in the case of real property a trust may be created in which the owner is trustee, without an effective transfer of legal title.⁷⁷ Although in order to create a trust, it is necessary that the equitable title or interest shall pass to the cestui que trust,⁷⁸ and there must be an intent to establish a present trust and create an equitable interest in the beneficiary,⁷⁹ an unequivocal declaration by the settlor that he holds property in present passes the equitable title or interest to the cestui que trust.⁸⁰

All essentials of a trust must exist,⁸¹ and, in accordance with the general rule, whether or not the owner has become a trustee is primarily a question of intention,⁸² which is always a question of fact, depending on the circumstances,⁸³ and a trust does not arise in the absence of the owner's intention to create a trust.⁸⁴ While it is not necessary that technical words or language be used,⁸⁵ such intention must be made apparent in an unequivocal manner,⁸⁶ and the owner should declare in unmistakable terms that he means to stand in a fiduciary relation to the object of his bounty.⁸⁷ Although any words which indicate with sufficient certainty an intention to create a trust will be effective⁸⁸ without the use of the words "trust" or "trustees,"⁸⁹ or, as sometimes stated, without declaring the trust in express terms,⁹⁰ the mere expression of an intention,⁹¹ or an intention not carried into effect,⁹² to create a trust is not sufficient, and a written statement sufficient in form will not control in the absence of an intention to create a trust.⁹³

Particular agreements

(1) A grantee held title to land only as trustee for benefit of grantor, where he paid no consideration to grantor and thereafter permitted grantor to borrow money and otherwise treat the property as his own.—Sepulveda v. Apablaza, 77 P.2d 526, 25 Cal.App.2d 381.

a. In General

In the absence of a statute to the contrary, a person acquiring title to property may create an enforceable express trust by agreeing to hold in trust for another or to convey or transfer to such other.

Subject to provisions of statutes regulating the creation and validity of trusts and the statute of frauds, a person acquiring title to property may create an enforceable express trust therein by agreeing to hold in trust for another⁹⁸ or to convey or transfer to such other⁹⁹ on the happening of a certain contingency.¹ Thus, a trust may be created by an agreement by a person taking title to property to convey or transfer to another on payment of a designated sum of money,² or to reconvey or retransfer to the grantor or transferor under certain circumstances,³ as, for example, on demand,⁴ or on

(2) Where brother and sister executed a trust agreement reciting that the sister as trustee had title to brother's realty, and reciting that the sister had taken the title and would hold it for the ultimate use and benefit of the brother and, on his death, for the brother's wife, title to the realty was vested in the sister, and a valid trust existed.—Ross v. Ross, 94 NE2d 885, 406 Ill. 598.

(3) Where testamentary trustee of infant devisee, who had never qualified, executed deed of testator's realty to testator's executor and infant's general guardian "as trustees in trust for the Estate of" testator, deed was valid as constituting express trust for benefit of infant as legatee.—Railroad Federal Savings & Loan Ass'n v. Sasser, 185 S.E. 826, 182 Ga. 474.

(2) Provision in deed under which grantor conveyed farm to his mother, reserving a life estate in himself, that grantee, as part of consideration, should make a will devising realty, at termination of grantor's life estate, to grantor's heirs of the body, created a valid trust.—Britsch v. Roth, 17 Ohio Supp. 46.

Reimbursement of purchase price and taxes

If a son acquired father's property from tax purchaser pursuant to agreement that son would hold title to the land in trust until such time as revenues would reimburse son for money paid to purchaser and such other sums as he might pay for taxes and upkeep and would then reconvey to father and brothers and sisters, a trust relationship arose in favor of the father and brothers and sisters on son's acquisition of the property.—Butler v. Subject to wishes as to reconveyance

"Where one conveys realty to another, to be held as the property of the grantor, and subject to his wishes as to reconveyance, it is held in trust by the grantee for the benefit

payment of a designated sum of money⁵ within a certain time.⁶

A trust may be created by an agreement of the grantee or transferee to apply and account for the property, income, or the proceeds in a specified manner,⁷ as, for example, by allowing the grantor or transferor the interest, rents, or profits,⁸ or a share thereof,⁹ or by applying the proceeds of a sale of the property to the support of the grantor,¹⁰ or by paying over to the grantor or transferor such proceeds¹¹ or a share thereof.¹² Likewise, a trust is created where the transferee agrees or is directed to pay the proceeds of the property or a certain amount therefrom to a third person.¹³

So, while the mere giving of a power to a creditor to sell property for the payment of the debt due him does not make him a trustee for his debtor,¹⁴ a trust may be created by an agreement on the part of the grantee or assignee to sell, pay certain debts, and return the residue of the property, or its proceeds to the grantor or transferor¹⁵ or debtor,¹⁶ or to the children of the grantor and debtor;¹⁷ to manage the property transferred, satisfy certain claims or debts out of the earnings, and then reconvey to the grantor or transferor;¹⁸ or to manage the property, pay certain claims or debts, reimburse the grantee or transferee from earnings or the proceeds of sale, and divide the balance of such proceeds between the parties to the conveyance or transfer.¹⁹

There is authority for the view that no trust is created where the agreement of the grantee or transferee to perform certain acts for the benefit of the grantor or another is merely the consideration for the conveyance or transfer,²⁰ as, for example, where there is an agreement of the grantee of real property to support the grantor,²¹ or where the promise of the grantee or transferee to pay a certain sum of money to a third person constitutes part or all of the consideration for an absolute conveyance or transfer.²² So a trust does not arise where it is clearly the intention of the parties that a conveyance shall pass all the interest of the grantor, whether legal or equitable, notwithstanding certain agreements or promises by the grantee.²³

In any event it is essential that there should be an agreement²⁴ instead of a mere voluntary unexecuted promise or declaration,²⁵ and that the agreement should be clear and unequivocal in its terms,²⁶ setting out the terms of the trust with sufficient certainty to render it enforceable.²⁷ A mere promise to obtain money and thereupon hold it in trust does not create a trust until it is at least so far executed that the money has been obtained in accordance with the promise,²⁸ but there is authority for the view that where there is a promise, based on a consideration, to pay out of a particular fund, the promisor is a trustee as soon as he obtains title to the fund.²⁹

Conditions precedent. Where the agreement contains a condition to be performed by the beneficiary, he may enforce the trust on performing the condition,³⁰ but only in that event.³¹ An agreement by one person to compensate another for such other's services by paying such other out of a fund to be acquired,³² or by giving such other an interest in property to be obtained in the future,³³ according to some cases, creates an express trust enforceable on performance of the services and the acquisition of the fund or property; and a like rule has been recognized where compensation for the use of a person's property is to be made out of fund to be acquired.³⁴ An agreement by the grantee of land that the grantor is to control the property, and that the grantee will join him in any deed, does not create a trust, where no deed is directed by the grantor.³⁵

Person entitled to claim as beneficiary. No trust arises from an agreement, in behalf of one who does not show himself to be connected in any way with the agreement or alleged trust.³⁶

Transactions not constituting trusts. A trust of the class here considered cannot be established by a transaction which merely creates an equitable lien,³⁷ mortgage,³⁸ or other security;³⁹ an executory contract to sell or convey⁴⁰ or reconvey;⁴¹ or an option to purchase.⁴² So a trust is not created by an agreement which merely creates a condition subsequent,⁴³ or by an agreement that if the promisor should obtain certain property in a specified manner he will discharge a debt due him from the promisee.⁴⁴ It has also been held that no trust is created where a debtor conveys real property to his creditor on the consideration that the property is to be sold, the proceeds applied first to the debt, and the remainder paid to the debtor.⁴⁵

b. Agreement to Purchase or Acquire Property for Another and Joint Acquisition

An express trust may be created by an agreement to purchase or acquire title to land for the benefit of another.

In some jurisdictions at least, an enforceable express trust may be created by an agreement thereafter to purchase or acquire title to land for the benefit of another who agrees to,⁴⁶ and does,⁴⁷ pay the consideration. The existence of an agreement to purchase for another on the part of the person who acquires the property is an essential of a trust,⁴⁸ and, according to some cases, the agreement must exist when the grantee acquires title in the case of a conveyance by deed without reservation of a lien for the purchase price, even though payment is subsequently made out of funds of another;⁴⁹ but an enforceable trust may be created by an agreement between the grantee under a deed retaining a vendor's lien to secure payment of notes given for the purchase price, and another that if such other will pay the notes the land shall belong to such other, where the agreement is duly performed by such other.⁵⁰ A promise to buy land and convey it to another, who has no interest in the land and who does not furnish any part of purchase money, does not create a trust.⁵¹

Equitable charge and not trust

Ordinarily, where property is transferred to another "subject to the payment of" a certain sum to a third person, or "paying" such a sum, an equitable charge and not a trust is created, since the transferee does not thereby manifest an intention to impose a duty on the transferee to deal with the property for the benefit of a third person.

part of such land to the other party does not necessarily create an express trust,⁵² it has been held that an express trust may be created by an agreement between or among persons jointly purchasing or acquiring title to land or other property that title shall be taken in the name of less than all for the benefit of all.⁵³ In any event it is essential that there should be an agreement, on the part of the person who acquires title, to purchase for the joint benefit of himself and another,⁵⁴ and that there should be a consideration to support the agreement where the person claiming as beneficiary has no interest in the property involved.⁵⁵ A trust is not created, however, by an agreement under which certain parties thereto have an option to acquire an equitable interest in real estate purchased by one of them, by payments to extinguish indebtedness for the purchase price.⁵⁶

While there is authority for the view that, where the purchase is not joint but is made by the person who takes title and who agrees to allow another person a share in the profits on a resale, the purchaser does not hold title to part of the property as trustee for such other party,⁵⁷ according to some decisions a provision for resale of the land purchased by the party who takes legal title and for sharing in profits does not necessarily prevent the existence of a trust,⁵⁸ and a trust may exist in respect of the land purchased where, under the contract, the property is in fact purchased by both parties, notwithstanding title is taken by one and provision is made for sharing in the profits of a resale.⁵⁹

§ 52. Trust Arising from Nature and Terms of Transaction without Explicit Declaration

A trust may arise from the nature and terms of the transaction without an explicit declaration of trust.

Under the rule that the declaration of trust need not be explicit and that the nature and terms of the transaction may give rise to an express trust, discussed supra § 43, trusts have been recognized or upheld under varying circumstances.⁶⁰

Particular transactions

(1) The proceeds of private settlement of stockholders' derivative action in state court against officers and directors of corporation, over and above the value of stock in corporation delivered by plaintiffs as part of settlement, constituted a trust fund for benefit of corporation and were held by plaintiffs and their attorney in trust for corporation.—Dabney v. Levy, D.C.N.Y., 93 F.Supp. 551, affirmed, C.A., 191 F.2d 201, certiorari denied Levy v. Dabney, 72 S.Ct. 177, 342 U.S. 887, 96 L.Ed. 665, rehearing denied 72 S.Ct. 301, 342 U.S. 911, 96 L.Ed. 682.

(2) Where title to ranch property was quieted in favor of two heirs on their entering into agreement that property together with cattle thereon should be sold "at first good chance for the best price possible" and remainder of money divided according to deceased's will, agreement was a declaration of trust, and the heirs became cotrustees of an express trust.—Sadler v. Sadler, D.C.Nev., 73 F.Supp. 588, affirmed, C.C.A., 167 F.2d 1

(3) Where agent had mortgage executed and delivered to him with understanding that he would finance building owner to extent of paying balance due contractor for benefit of materialmen, trust was created.—Shellings v. Builders' Supply Co., 152 So. 459, 228 Ala. 47, rehearing refused 155 So. 858, 229 Ala. 1.

(4) Where parties, as a condition precedent to consideration by court of husband's action for divorce, agreed that wife should have half of husband's property, and agreement provided that title to land should rest in respective parties with delivery of deeds by an escrow agent when divorce was decreed, husband became a trustee as to wife's rights under agreement.—Orr v. Orr, 177 S.W.2d 915, 206 Ark. 844.

A form of conveyance which has been employed to create a use or trust is a covenant to stand seized to uses.

A form of conveyance at one time employed to create a use or trust, but little used at the present time, is a covenant to stand seized to uses,⁶¹ which has been defined as a conveyance by which a man seized of lands covenants, in consideration of blood or marriage, that he will stand seized of the lands to the use of his wife, child, or kinsman.⁶² While it has been held that a deed of land to take effect at the grantor's death is good as a covenant to stand seized to the grantee's use notwithstanding the absence of any relationship of blood or marriage,⁶³ in accordance with the above definition it is usually held or recognized that the characteristic which differentiates this from other declarations of trust is the fact that the consideration necessary⁶⁴ and sufficient⁶⁵ to support it is that of blood or marriage. An instrument may operate as a covenant to stand seized to uses where the existence of a consideration of blood or marriage appears or may be inferred, although it is not expressly recited,⁶⁶ and notwithstanding a valuable consideration also exists.⁶⁷ count and board of directors of corporation adopted trust instrument and officers of corporation conducted their operations in accordance with its provisions, by acts of corporation and trustees an express trust was created for benefit of participants and no particular formality was necessary.—Humpa v. Hedstrom, 94 N.E.2d 614, 341 Ill.App. 606.

(6) Where separation agreement incorporated into divorce decree provided that father would pay certain sums weekly for support of minor children, with respect to any benefits intended for such children, mother's position was that of trustee charged with duty both legal and moral to effect collection so as to make available to minor children benefits intended for them.—Carson v. Carson, 89 N.E.2d 555, 120 Ind.App. 1.

(7) Where owner of adjoining plantations sold one with exception of 2 acres and then, after having executed trust deed covering the other, conveyed it and the 2 acres, not covered by trust deed, to purchaser who assumed to pay indebtedness secured by trust deed, assumption under which purchaser took possession of land created trust in favor of beneficiary of trust deed as to the 2 acres.—Federal Land Bank of New Orleans v. Boyd, 171 So. 1, 177 Miss. 311.

(8) Under agreement giving surviving tenant in common sole right to determine when and on what terms property should be sold and providing proportion of proceeds to which each tenant should be entitled, power of sale vested in survivor was a power in trust.—In re Taylor's Will, 122 N.Y.S.2d 500, 282 App.Div. 304.

(9) Where bank holding collateral securing deposit of county funds contracted that it would accept no collateral in substitution which it was not satisfied would at all times have a market value equal to amount of the deposit, the bank was a trustee.—*Knox County v. While there is authority for the view that an instrument may be given effect as a covenant to stand seized to the use of the grantor for life and after his death to the use of the grantee and his heirs,⁶⁸ it has been held that an instrument conveying the fee of land to the grantee charged with the usufruct for life in favor of the grantor is not a covenant to stand seized to uses.⁶⁹ It has also been held that, where the common-law prohibition against a man's contracting with his wife obtains, a covenant by him with her to stand seized for her use is inoperative in a court of law.⁷⁰

At common law and by statute, a person can, by depositing his own owner and depositor of the moneys⁷² under an agreement with the bank⁷³ for the benefit of one other than the depositor,⁷⁴ and, in accordance with the rule that one may create a trust in his own personal property by constituting himself trustee, discussed supra § 50, the depositor may constitute himself a trustee in respect of the moneys deposited.⁷⁵ The declaration of trust may be made after the deposit is made.⁷⁶ It is necessary that the essentials of a trust should be present in order to create an express trust.⁷⁷

In respect of trusts created by the deposit of money in a bank by one person in trust for another, or savings bank trusts as they are sometimes called,⁷⁸ in the earlier cases, at least, there was some confusion, due in part to the development of the law,⁷⁹ and in part to the application of the law to varying states of facts.⁸⁰ The courts have engraf-money in a bank and declaring his intent, create a trust in favor of another, even without the knowledge of that person, and although the depositor reserves the right to withdraw the money, if he so desires.—Marine Midland Trust Co. of Binghamton v. Stanford, 9 N.Y.S.2d 648, 256 App. Div. 26, appeal denied 11 N.Y.S.2d 647, 256 App. Div. 1026, affirmed 24 N.E.2d 20, 281 N.Y. 760.

Existence of debtor and creditor relationship

(1) An agreement that bank and trust company should hold deposits in savings account in trust for depositor during his lifetime and at his death for his sister constitutes a trust, notwithstanding existence of debtor and creditor relationship between parties.—Bank of America Nat. Trust & Sav. Ass'n v. Hazelbud, 68 F.2d 385, 21 Cal. App.2d 109.

(2) A deposit of moneys in a bank corporate or governmental debtor, with instructions to pay maturing bond interest coupons of depositor, does not ordinarily create a trust for benefit of bondholders, but merely creates a debtor-creditor relation between bank and depositor, coupled with an agency on part of bank to make the prescribed payment, and fact that the moneys are deposited in a special account for the specified purpose does not change rule.—Ehag Eisenbahnwerte Holding Aktiengesellschaft v. Banca Nazionale A. Romanelli, 117 N.E.2d 346, 306 N.Y. 242.

(3) Agreements or transactions as creating a debtor and creditor relationship and not a trust generally see infra § 59.

Use of funds by bank

An alleged violation of statute prohibiting trustee from using property for his own profit will not defeat otherwise complete right of sister under agreement that bank and trust company should hold deposits in savings account in trust for depositor during his lifetime and at his death for his sister.—Bank of America Nat. Trust & Savings Ass'n v. Hazelbud, 68 F.2d 385, 21 Cal. App.2d 109.

80. Me.—Bath Sav. Inst. v. Hathorn,

ed some limitations on the general doctrine laid down in the early cases which recognized that trusts may be created by such a deposit.⁸¹ Because of the common practice of persons to make deposits in this form, without any intention of creating a trust⁸² or divesting themselves of beneficial ownership,⁸³ but for other reasons,⁸⁴ such as the evasion of restrictions on the amount of deposits,⁸⁵ there has developed in some jurisdictions the doctrine of so-called tentative trusts, considered in subdivision d of this section.

Primarily, the intention of the depositor controls in determining whether or not a trust has been created⁸⁶ and what are the terms of the trust.⁸⁷ No trust is created in the absence of such intention⁸⁸ or if the intention is not given effect.⁸⁹ Usually, in deciding as to the existence of a trust,⁹⁰ including the intention of the depositor,⁹¹ the surrounding facts and circumstances are considered in connection with the acts and declarations of the depositor,⁹² and the question is determined as one of fact and not of law.⁹³

The form of the account or deposit is not necessarily conclusive as to the existence of a trust,⁹⁴ including the intention of the depositor.⁹⁵ Thus, while a deposit of one's own money in his own name, with nothing in the form of the deposit to indicate that it is in trust for another, does not, without more, create a trust,⁹⁶ it is not necessary that the depositor should technically and precisely declare his purpose and intention to create a trust,⁹⁷ and the absence of the word "trust" or "trustee"

At time of making deposit

Fundamental question

Voluntary savings bank account trusts in their creation are like gifts, in that the fundamental question in each instance is whether the donor has by both act and intention completed the gift or trust.—Malley's Estate v. from the title of the account does not prevent a determination that a trust has been created where the essentials of a trust are present.⁹⁸

On the other hand, while the fact that the deposit is in form in trust for one other than the depositor is some proof of intention⁹⁹ and entitled to consideration,¹ or raises a presumption of an intention to create a trust,² and may control in the absence of countervailing circumstances,³ or when supported by other circumstances,⁴ the fact that the depositor is designated as trustee⁵ for another⁶ is not necessarily controlling or conclusive, and will not prevail where there is an absence of an intention to create a trust,⁷ as shown by the declarations of the depositor⁸ and the surrounding circumstances.⁹

Recognizing or applying the foregoing rules, it has frequently been held that making a particular deposit in the name of the depositor which on the face of the deposit or account is in trust for another creates a trust,¹⁰ especially where the fact of such a deposit has been communicated to the beneficiary,¹¹ which may be complete or irrevocable.¹² There

Retention or reservation of control

(1) That depositor in bank account in his name as trustee for brothers intended to draw thereon, at least in part, to furnish support for one of brothers, did not establish that such brother or his estate had legal interest therein as long as depositor intended to retain full control.—Stamford Sav. Bank v. Everett, 42 A.2d 662, 132 Conn. 92.

(2) A mere bank deposit made by a person in his own name as "trustee" or in his name and that of a faithful and obedient agent as "trustee," for a "Foundation" which has no legal existence, over which deposit the depositor reserves complete control during his life, is insufficient to create a trust entitling the supposed beneficiary to the deposit as against the depositor's administrator.—Castle v. Cross, 32 Hawaii 197.

(3) The manner in which settlor, who as one of three trustees assumed actual management of trust, kept his personal books, wherein he made charges for expenditures on behalf of trust under trust instrument, or expenditures for beneficiary from his own funds, and withdrew money from savings account in which income from trust had been deposited, to reimburse himself, was not indicative of secondary trust of savings account, to which beneficiary would be entitled absolutely.—Boyer v. Backus, 276 N.W. 564, 282 Mich. 593, motion denied 280 N.W. 756, 282 Mich. 701, certiorari denied 59 S.Ct. 147, 305 U.S. 614, 83 L.Ed. 416, rehearing denied 59 S.Ct. 248, 305 U.S. 674, 83 L.Ed. 437.

Deposit card

A deposit card stating that depositor held savings account in trust, to control and dispose of as he saw fit during his lifetime, and on his death to pay to named beneficiary the full amount then standing to credit of account, was sufficient to establish a valid trust for benefit of named beneficiary, who was entitled on depositor's death to possession of deposit book and to the deposit represented thereby.—*Cohen v. is authority for the view that the mere deposit of money in a bank in trust for another is equivocal and ambiguous,¹³ and is not sufficient alone to create an enforceable trust,¹⁴ that there must in addition be some unequivocal act or declaration showing an intention to create a trust,¹⁵ and that, where a person deposits money in a bank in his own name in trust for another, who is neither a party nor privy to the transaction,¹⁶ and retains full control over such money,¹⁷ a trust is not created, but merely an executory one which is not enforceable.¹⁸

Retention of control and subsequent deposits or withdrawals. While the fact that the depositor retains possession of the bankbook may, under certain circumstances, show an absence of intention to create a trust,¹⁹ retention of the book²⁰ or the certificate of deposit,²¹ his making subsequent deposits in the account,²² his retention of the power of with-

Completion by act and intention

Where it is shown that the donor of a savings bank account has at a certain time completed the trust by both act and intention, the trust is irrevocably constituted.—Malley's Estate v. Malley, 34 A.2d 761, 69 R.I. 407.

Return of bankbook

Where wife, after depositing earnings of herself, husband, and son in her name, had new bankbook issued to herself as trustee for son, and handed book to son, fully executed trust inter vivos of entire account was created, even though son returned book so wife could obtain interest.—Scanzo v. Hudson County Nat. Bank, 59 A.2d 253, 142 N.J. Eq. 487.

Ownership or dominion

Where testator opened a savings account with a mutual savings bank and deposited a specific sum in his name as trustee for charity fund of a named village in foreign country, and no withdrawals from or additions to account were made, except accumulation of interest, and testator at all times retained control over account and did not strip himself of ownership or dominion over subject matter, no valid trust was established and sum on deposit was payable to executors of testator's estate as though account had been opened in name of testator alone.—Howard Sav. Inst. v. Baronych, 73 A.2d 853, 8 N.J. Super. 599.

Withdrawals

(1) Where mother opened savings accounts as trustee for daughters and withdrew moneys from the accounts for her own purposes, there was no trust created for their benefit.—Abruzese v. Oestrich, 47 A.2d 883, 138 N.J. Eq. 33.

(2) The style of savings accounts in names of depositor and wife as trustees for minor children and trustees' testimony that accounts were opened for children's benefit were insufficient to show a valid trust in either account as against depositor's subsequent judgment creditor, where evidence as to source of original deposits and number, time and source and amount of later deposits were vague or entirely lacking and depositor had made withdrawals from both accounts for his personal use.—*Passaic Nat. drawal,²³ or his subsequent withdrawals of deposits²⁴ or interest,²⁵ do not necessarily prevent the existence of a trust or destroy a trust duly executed; such retention of the passbook,²⁶ subsequent deposits,²⁷ or withdrawals of deposits²⁸ or interest²⁹ may be consistent with the existence of a trust.

Transfer of beneficial or equitable interest. While there are statements to the effect that it is not necessary that the entire beneficial interest in the fund must immediately and irrevocably be vested in the beneficiary in order to create a valid trust,³⁰ in respect of an executed or complete trust, the creator, while retaining title in himself³¹ or transferring it to a third person,³² transfers the equitable or beneficial title to the cestui que trust;³³ and the view has been taken that, in order to create a voluntary, enforceable, executed, or complete trust, it is necessary that there should be a transfer or gift of the equitable or beneficial title.³⁴

b. Account in Several Names

A trust may be created by a bank deposit in the form of a joint account or an account in several names.

In some jurisdictions at least, the fact that a bank account is in form a joint account or an account in several names does not necessarily prevent the existence of a trust in respect thereof.³⁵ The question as to whether a trust has been created is primarily one of intention³⁶ and, in the absence of an intention on the part of the depositor to create a trust, no trust arises.³⁷ In order to create an

Particular accounts

(1) Where depositor placed fund from personal bank account in joint account with another, and at time issued a directive that joint account should be held in trust for benefit of persons named should they be in special need, and second person accepted trust, joint account created a valid trust when account was opened.—Davenport v. Davenport Foundation, 222 P.2d 11, 36 Cal.2d 67.

App.2d 833.

(3) Where a sister opens a saving fund in her name jointly with a brother under an express arrangement and understanding with the bank and the brother that the fund is to be used only to pay the brother's funeral expenses, a trust is created.—*Department of Public Assistance v. Intention of original owner

Whether a trust in law with respect to a bank deposit has been created effectually to vest fund in original owner or another as survivor depends entirely on actual intention of original owner of fund when he had entry in bankbook made vesting ownership in himself and another, with balance to the survivor.—*Whittington v. Instrument directing transfer

Instrument directing bank to transfer money from account of one signer of instrument to joint account in his name and name of other signer, and declaring amount of joint account should be used solely for payment of certain notes or should be drawn only on joint signatures of persons who shared the account indicated that a trust was declared in such funds.—In re Haseltine's Will, 113 N.Y.S.2d 752, 280 App.Div. 857.

Although an account or deposit in the name of two persons, or the survivor of them, does not necessarily create a trust,³⁹ since an intent to create a trust must be established,⁴⁰ it has also been held or recognized that a depositor, by making such a deposit of his funds, may create a trust⁴¹ for the benefit of the other person named⁴² in the balance of the deposit at the death of the depositor,⁴³ or for the joint benefit of the depositor and such other person.⁴⁴ It has been stated that as a general rule, there is a sufficient declaration of trust where the entry by the depositor is in trust for himself and another, joint owners, subject to the order of either, balance at death of either to belong to the survivor,⁴⁵ with the deposit as the corpus, the depositor as

(1) The fact that bankbook was in possession of the one other than the original owner was not, of itself, sufficient to establish an intention of the original owner to vest the entire ownership of the balance of the fund in the other after the original owner's death.—Ragan v. Kelly, 24 A.2d 289, 180 Md. 324.

(2) Possession of a bankbook, in order to constitute the other the owner of the fund, must be with the full knowledge of the original owner of the fund.—Ragan v. Kelly, supra.

Treatment of fund as own

Where with donative intent member of armed forces made an allotment of portion of his pay in favor of his sister for sole purpose of her support and she opened bank account in her name and in name of brother but treated fund as her own, the fund was a gift and not trust and she was not required to surrender fund to administrator of brother's estate.—*Mitchell v. Particular transactions

(1) Where original depositor in bank changed nature of account to joint account with another payable to survivor and such other contributed nothing to fund on deposit, there was no trust title under which deposit could pass to such other on death of original depositor.—Northcott v. Livingood, La.App., 10 So.2d 401.

(2) Husband was held entitled to recover from wife money which she withdrew from bank accounts in both of their names, or for survivor, where agreement existed between husband and wife that deposit was his sole property and that arrangement was solely for wife's benefit in event of husband's decease.—Gibbons v. Gibbons, 4 N.E.2d 1019, 296 Mass. 89.

(3) Where intestate deposited money with trust company and received mortgage trust certificates in name of himself or his son, and in names of himself or his grandchildren, and subsequently directed that certificates be indorsed with name of himself or his wife, and company was obligated to pay fixed sum on certain date and to pay interest on such sum at fixed rate at stated intervals, company's obligation was that of debtor and not that of trustee, and hence irrevocable trust was not created in favor of son and grandchildren.—E. P. Wilbur Trust Co. v. Knadler, 185 A. 319, 322 Pa. 17.

40. Pa.—E. P. Wilbur Trust Co. v. Knadler, 185 A. 319, 322 Pa. 17.

Evidence of intention necessary

(1) If there be substantial evidence from which the intention of the parties may be ascertained and such intention is to set up a trust, action accomplishes that result.—Menger v. Otero County State Bank, 98 P.2d 834, 44 N.M. 82.

(2) Deposit by one of his money in account in names of himself and another is not of itself sufficient in absence of affirmative evidence to that effect to indicate intention on part of depositor to vest in added party a joint beneficial interest in fund with right of survivorship.—E. P. Wilbur Trust Co. v. Knadler, 185 A. 319, 322 Pa. 17.

"It makes no difference, in the absence of fraud, whose money it was when deposited, or how much either contributed to the trust or deposit."—Kormann v. Safe Deposit & Trust Co. of Baltimore, 23 A.2d 692, 694, 180 Md. 270.

Description as joint owners

Although the more usual form describes the beneficiaries as joint owners, and permits withdrawal by either party, this is not essential to the creation of a trust.—Mushaw v. Mushaw, 39 A.2d 465, 183 Md. 511.

Not revocable as tentative trust

A joint deposit of the proceeds from a mortgage loan on realty in which both husband and wife had invested money and which was owned by them as tenants by the entirety, in trust for both husband and wife with a right of survivorship, was not revocable as a tentative trust created by one with a reserved power.—Paffax v. Savings Bank of Baltimore, 199 A. 872, 175 Md. 136, 116 A.L.R. 1334.

Rights determined by terms

The rights of beneficiary of trust created by joint deposit were determined by terms of the deed of trust.—Paffax v. Savings Bank of Baltimore, supra.

Motive behind deposit

The motive behind a bank deposit by one, in trust, until withdrawal thereof, for himself and another, joint owners, subject to withdrawal by either, the balance at death of either to belong to survivor, is that either of beneficiaries may have access to the fund at any time, that it shall not be subject to claims of any except their joint creditors, and that generally, in death of either, administration by orphans' court may be avoided.—Kormann v. Safe Deposit & Trust Co. of Baltimore, 23 A.2d 692, 180 Md. 270.

Power of withdrawal

The power to withdraw from a joint bank deposit, in trust for depositors as joint owners subject to the order of either with a right of trustee, and the depositor and another as beneficiaries,⁴⁶ since unexplained it indicates an intention to create a trust.⁴⁷ In such cases, the balance at the death of either belongs to the survivor, not by a gift and delivery of the bankbook, or by right of survivorship of one of two joint owners, or by a gift of the funds inter vivos, but purely and exclusively because of the trust.⁴⁸ However, such an entry may be explained and the intention it indicates may be rebutted.⁴⁹ While the depositor's retention of the passbook may indicate the want of intention to create a trust,⁵⁰ the fact that the depositor retains the passbook⁵¹ or retains the right to withdraw all or any portion of the deposit,⁵² does not prevent the existence of a trust since the retention of the passbook may be an act pursuant to a proper execution of the trust.⁵³

Where an owner with a single account in a bank signs an order in a proper form for the transfer of the account into a trust account for the owner and another, such an order is sufficient to authorize the bank to transfer the account to a trust form, notwithstanding the fact that the order does not state the amount of the account or the account number.⁵⁴ Where the account is made a joint account merely for the convenience and benefit of the depositor,⁵⁵ and the depositor delivers the book to the other person designated, in order to effectuate the purpose for which the account is created,⁵⁶ it has been held that the person so designated holds whatever title he acquires in trust for the depositor.

c. Deposit in Name of Another

An express trust may arise in favor of the depositor or a third person, where a deposit is made in the name of one other than the depositor for the benefit of the depositor or such third person.

It has been recognized that an express trust may arise in favor of the depositor or owner of money⁵⁷ or a third person,⁵⁸ where a deposit is made in the name of one other than the depositor or owner for the benefit of the depositor or owner or such third person. However, while the fact that a deposit in the name of one other than the depositor, subject to the control of the depositor, may constitute a trust for the benefit of such other,⁵⁹ and the declaration of trust may be made after the deposit is made,⁶⁰ a deposit in the name of a person survivorship, is not joint, but exists completely in each beneficiary as a reserved personal right.—Kornmann v. Safe Deposit & Trust Co. of Baltimore, supra—Fairfax v. Savings Bank of Baltimore, 199 A. 872, 175 Md. 136, 116 A.L.R. 1334.

Signature cards

Signature cards indicating intention to create trust may be rebutted by proof that in signing them the donor had no such intention.—Bollack v. Bollack, 182 A. 317, 169 Md. 407.

Creation of special trust

Where original owner of fund in bank, who was seventy-nine years of age, went to hospital for a serious operation, and a niece obtained his bank book from a sister of the hospital and then secured from bank a card to change entry in bank book, and original owner signed the card, and card was taken to bank where entry was made in bank book establishing a trust in original owner and niece, subject to order of either, with balance to survivor, evidence failed to establish a clear and definite intention of original owner to relinquish absolute control over fund, or that it was his desire that niece become owner of balance of fund at his death, and there was created merely a special trust which came to an end on death of original owner.—Ragan v. Kelly, 24 A.2d 289, 180 Md. 324.

Payment of medical and hospital expenses

Where aged decedent, in signing joint tenancy agreement with grandnephew, respecting her checking account, intended only to authorize him to pay her medical and hospital expenses, the bank, as between itself, grandnephew, and decedent, and, after decedent's death, her executrix, would be justified in treating the account as a fund in which parties had a joint interest, but as between grandnephew and decedent money in account belonged wholly to decedent and after her death to her legal representative, and any legal title of grandnephew in joint account deposit was in trust for decedent.—*Williams v. "Tentative trust" defined see supra § 21.

Nothing passes to tentative beneficiary by the opening of such an account, and the jus disponendi of the avails remains as completely in the depositor during his lifetime as if the account stood in his own name.—In re Kelly's Will, 271 N.Y.S. 457, 151 Misc. 277.

Particular deposits

(1) Trust created by mother's deposit in bank in account reading "in trust for" her daughter prior to adjudication of mother as an incompetent, which was intended for support of daughter who was an incompetent in fact was a tentative and not irrevocable trust where mother retained custody of bank book, had withdrawn accrued interest and had once withdrawn part of principal.—Brooklyn Trust Co. v. Smart, 293 N.Y.S. 823, 161 Misc. 857.

(2) Where claimant's grandmother, who was named as beneficiary in claimant's deceased father's life policy and who knew that the father wanted proceeds of policy to be used for claimant's support and education, deposited proceeds in a bank under a savings account in grandmother's name as trustee, with directions that fund was to revert to the grandmother when claimant became of age, the grandmother's acts created a tentative trust in money representing proceeds.—In re Gorgas' Estate, 24 A.2d 171, 147 Pa.Super. 319.

Recoverable trust

(1) A valid recoverable trust may be created in a savings account with power remaining in the settlor to withdraw a part or all of the money where the settlor is named as trustee.—In re Alberts' Estate, 100 P.2d 538, 38 Cal.App.2d 42.

(2) The delivery of the bank book to the intended beneficiary is not, however, contemplated as one of the acts of the settlor in conformity to the continuation of such a trust.—In re Alberts' Estate, 100 P.2d 538, 38 Cal.App.2d 42.

Statute relating to declarations and grants of trust and to implied trusts did not preclude court from recognizing as a trust fund money on deposit with building association in name of testatrix as trustee for her grandson

In some jurisdictions, while it is recognized that a trust may be created in respect of a bank deposit which is absolute and irrevocable by the donor or depositor,⁶³ in cases in which usually, if not always, saving deposits or accounts are involved,⁶⁴ the courts have recognized so-called tentative trusts,⁶⁵ or Totten trusts,⁶⁶ in respect of such deposits, as who was a polio victim.—In re Scott's Estate, D.C.D.C., 96 F.Supp. 290.

Validity and incidents

(1) Totten trusts, if real and not merely colorable or pretended, are valid transfers with legally fixed effects.—In re Halpern's Estate, 100 N. E.2d 120, 303 N.Y. 33.—In re Prokasky's Will, 109 N.Y.S.2d 888.

(2) A Totten trust is either totally valid or totally invalid and a court has no power to divide up such a trust and call part of it illusory and the other part good.—In re Halpern's Estate, supra.—In re Friesling's Estate, 123 N.Y.S.2d 207.

(3) The sole test in case of Totten trust is whether depositor has in good faith divested himself of ownership of his property or has made an illusory transfer, and the law is not concerned with actual motive of depositor.—In re Phipps' Will, 125 N.Y. S.2d 606.

(4) A Totten trust is not illusory merely because it operates or was intended to defeat a wife's expectant interest in her husband's property.—In re Naidan's Estate, 107 N.Y.S.2d 701.

(5) Right of settlor of Totten trust to assert complete dominion and control over account in his lifetime is an incident of such trust.—In re Prokasky's Will, supra.

(6) The creator of a Totten trust may withdraw any or all of such fund, the theory being that during the lifetime of the creator the fund remains his to be withdrawn by him at will.—Silk v. Silk, 295 N.Y.S. 517, 162 Misc. 773.

(7) Under Totten trusts, whereby depositor opens savings account in trust for named person, reserving right of revocation, depositor is both settlor and trustee, retains enjoyment of the entire income for life, and can control his own actions as trustee.—Murray v. Brooklyn Sav. Bank, 9 N.

where a deposit is made by the depositor in his own name in trust for another⁶⁷ or where the account is opened by the depositor in the name of a third person in trust for another.⁶⁸ The rule is frequently stated with respect to such deposits is that a deposit made by one person of his own money in his own name as trustee for another, standing alone, does not establish an irrevocable trust during his lifetime, but is a tentative trust merely, revocable at will,⁶⁹ until the depositor dies or completes the gift in

Y.S.2d 227, 169 Misc. 1014, reversed on other grounds 15 N.Y.S.2d 915, 258 App.Div. 132.

(8) In the case of the so-called Totten trust, ownership by beneficiary of bank account is purely tentative unless there is an actual delivery of bank book in lifetime of creator of trust, or like completion of donation, or unless trust becomes operative by reason of death of real owner of fund and the title of real owner of fund continues unimpaired until death supervenes.—In re Haggerty's Estate, 38 N.Y.S.2d 433.

(9) Right to revoke entire Totten trust clearly includes lesser right to revoke it pro tanto.—In re Prokasky's Will, 109 N.Y.S.2d 888.

(10) Moneys deposited in Totten trust are subject to claims of the depositor's creditors.—Workmen's Compensation Board v. Furman, 106 N.Y.S.2d 404.

Account must be in such form

(1) A Totten trust depends on the form of depositor's account with bank and arises only where the account stands in the name of the depositor in trust for another.—Phillipsen v. Emigrant Indus. Sav. Bank, 86 N.Y.S.2d 133.

(2) Where depositor opened a joint savings account in his name or in the name of his sister, and thereafter the depositor placed in the passbook a paper writing stating that he bequeathed what was left of the money in the account to charitable institution, institution was not entitled to proceeds of the account on theory of a Totten trust.—Phillipsen v. Emigrant Indus. Sav. Bank, supra.

(3) A trust in bank account in name of claimed beneficiary, who was specifically designated therein and acted as trustee for depositor, was not a Totten trust.—Application of Wheeler, 72 N.Y.S.2d 115.

(4) A tentative trust when used in its strict legal sense applies only to a deposit made by one person of his own money in his own name as trustee for another.—In re Brill's Estate, 64 Pa.Dist. & Co. 155.

(5) Where it is uncontroverted that the funds were those of the ostensible beneficiary of the account and not those of the ostensible depositor the tentative trust or Totten trust theory has no application.—In re Goldsmith's Estate, Pa.Orph., 32 North Co. 157.

Donee's deposit for donor

Donee's deposit of money given to him by donor in name of donee as trustee for donor does not necessarily create a trust in which donor has a present interest and is not necessarily inconsistent with a completed gift.—Hyman v. Tarplee, 149 P.2d 453, 64 Cal.App.2d 805.

Tentative nature

While a trust created by an account opened by one person in trust for another is of a tentative nature, in the sense that its continued existence depends on the depositor, its creation does not depend on his death.—Delaware Trust Co. v. Fitzmaurice, 31 A.2d 383, 27 Del.Ch. 101, modified on other grounds, Crumlish v. Delaware Trust Co., 38 A.2d 463, 27 Del.Ch. 374.

Presumptively tentative trust

(1) Deposit of money in savings or checking account in name of depositor in trust for another creates presumptively a tentative or revocable trust.—In re Furjanick's Estate, 100 A.2d 85, 375 Pa. 484.

(2) A presumptively tentative trust, created by savings bank deposit in name of depositor as trustee for another, stands as executed trust as of time of its creation, in absence of evidence that depositor had no intention to create trust or revoke it.—Wilder v. Howard, 4 S.E.2d 199, 188 Ga. 426.

Revocation of trusts generally see infra §§ 88–91.

Deposit in building and loan association

A person depositing money in building and loan association in his own name and as trustee for his brother and signing signature card with his own name solely created a trust revocable at will during such person's lifetime.—Evinger v. MacDougall, 82 P.2d 194, 28 Cal.App.2d 175.

Withdrawal or other disposition

(1) A deposit in name of depositor as trustee for third person, where depositor retains right to withdraw his lifetime⁷⁰ by some unequivocal act or declaration,⁷¹ such as delivery of the passbook or notice to the beneficiary.⁷²

Unless set aside for fraud or incompetency,⁷³ the trust becomes absolute and irrevocable on the death of the depositor before the beneficiary without revocation or some decisive act or declaration of disaffirmance,⁷⁴ and entitles the beneficiary to the all money deposited and third person is entitled to balance only on death of depositor if no other disposition has been made of fund by depositor, is a tentative trust revocable at will, and, in absence of agreement to contrary, third person has no right to withdraw money prior to death of depositor.—Hymen v. Tarplee, 149 P.2d 453, 64 Cal.App.2d 805

(2) A person may make himself a trustee of a bank deposit even though he reserves the right to withdraw or otherwise dispose of the fund during his lifetime.—Smallwood v. Boyd, 237 S.W.2d 66, 314 Ky. 763.

(3) A deposit in a savings account in name of depositor as trustee for another with right to make withdrawals or otherwise revoke the trust creates a tentative trust revocable by depositor during his lifetime.—Rickel v. Peck, 2 N.W.2d 140, 211 Minn. 576, 138 A.L.R. 1375.

(4) A trust was a tentative trust in so far as settlor reserved right to make withdrawals against principal, in that the trust was either partially or solely revocable at will of settlor during his lifetime but subject to becoming absolute at his death.—In re Geel's Estate, Mo App., 143 S.W.2d 327.

(5) The changing of account to the name of the depositor in trust for sister-in-law and turning of passbook over to her, followed by a retention of control over the account and withdrawals therefrom by depositor created merely a revocable or tentative trust for the sister-in-law.—In re Bearinger's Estate, 9 A.2d 342, 336 Pa. 253.

(6) If withdrawal of money from "Totter" trust by creator during his lifetime is without his knowledge and consent, is involuntary or is result of fraud and duress, withdrawal is a nullity and moneys so withdrawn are recoverable by creator during his lifetime or his legal representative after his death. When so recovered, they would again become a part of fund impressed with the trust, and pass to the cestui que trust when trust becomes irrevocable on death of creator.—Silk v. Silk, 295 N.Y.S. 517, 162 Misc. 773.

Tentative rights turned into present vested rights

(1) The tentative rights of presumptive beneficiary of trust created by deposit of money by one person in his own name as trustee for another may be turned into vested present rights during depositor's lifetime, if he completes gift in his lifetime either by acts sufficient to constitute a valid gift inter vivos, or to effect the creation of a present trust.—In re

balance remaining at the time of the depositor's death,⁷⁵ but not to anything more than such balance.⁷⁶ In the event, however, of the prior death of the beneficiary his interest in the account ceases and the fund becomes the absolute property of the depositor, free from the trust.⁷⁷ According to some cases, a tentative trust may be made absolute or irrevocable only by one or the other of the two methods above indicated, that is, by the death of the depositor before the beneficiary without revocation or by some unequivocal act or declaration of the depositor during his lifetime.⁷⁸ It is difficult to lay down general rules for the purpose of determining whether a particular trust is tentative or irrevocable.⁷⁹ Whether the trust is tentative or irrevocable depends on the intention of the depositor

Deposit in new account without trust provision

Where bank deposit was made in depositor's name in trust and his attorney in fact deposited liquidating dividend checks received in course of liquidation of bank in new account in another bank in depositor's name without any trust provision for beneficiary, fund so transferred was impressed with trust in favor of beneficiary, who was entitled thereto on depositor's death in absence of any disaffirmance or revocation of trust.—In re Stitt's Estate, 289 N.Y.S. 697, 160 Misc. 162.

Presumption that absolute trust was created as to balance remaining on deposit after death of depositor without disaffirming trust see infra § 67.

Absolute owners

Where wife living apart from husband within three years after separation opened bank accounts in her own name in trust for designated persons and thereafter made withdrawals from certain of the accounts, and there was no evidence that transfers were illusory, trusts became effective on death of wife, and beneficiaries became absolute owners of balance.—In re Prokasky's Will, 109 N.Y.S. 2d 888.

Absence of contemporaneous facts or declarations

Decedent's bank deposit in own name in trust for niece created absolute trust for niece as to amount on hand on decedent's death, in absence of evidence of contemporaneous facts or declarations with respect to deposit.—In re Clark's Estate, 268 N.Y.S. 253, 149 Misc. 374.

Death of depositor and beneficiary in common disaster

Since it is an inherent incident of a tentative trust that the beneficiary must survive the settlor before title to the fund can vest in him, unless the gift is completed in the depositor's lifetime by some unequivocal act or declaration, where one who has deposited money in a savings account in his own name as trustee for another dies in a common disaster with the beneficiary, under circumstances giving rise to no presumption of survivorship, the balance of the deposit passes to the personal representatives of the depositor rather than to those of the beneficiary.—In re McWilliams' Estate, supra.

or donor,⁸⁰ determinable as a question of fact,⁸¹ in view of established legal principles.⁸² The general rule that a trust does not arise unless the intent of the alleged settlor to create one clearly appears is applicable in determining whether a depositor who has created a tentative savings bank trust intended to make it irrevocable,⁸³ and clear and unambiguous language or conduct is required to establish such an intention.⁸⁴ It has been held that in order to render a trust, tentative in form, absolute or irrevocable during the lifetime of the donor or depositor, his intention to transfer a present interest to the named beneficiary must ex-

While the delivery of the bankbook to the beneficiary has been held sufficient to transform a tentative trust into an irrevocable one,⁸⁷ at least where there are other supporting circumstances,⁸⁸ it has also been held that notifying the named beneficiary of the deposit and its nature and delivering the passbook to such beneficiary for safekeeping, considered either separately⁸⁹ or jointly,⁹⁰ do not conclusively establish an irrevocable trust, and that, in order to transform a tentative trust into an irrevocable

Strong circumstantial evidence

Even strong circumstantial evidence that a tentative trust was created in consideration of the creation of a similar trust by the beneficiary for the settlor will not make a tentative trust irrevocable in the absence of direct testimony establishing such fact and an agreement that the trusts were to be irrevocable.—In re Rodgers' Estate, 80 Pa. Facts held insufficient

(1) Fact that testatrix and her sister lived together, sharing all expenses, had reciprocal wills and reciprocal tentative trusts, with common possession of passbooks, was not sufficient to establish intent that such trusts were to be irrevocable.—In re Rodgers' Estate, 97 A.2d 789, 374 Pa. 246.

(2) Where decedent placed money in savings account in her own name in trust for beneficiary, and later sent beneficiary letter stating that money was a gift which might come in handy when depositor died, and depositor on two later occasions withdrew money from account and also wrote bank cashier that she did not feel that she should put money in hands of beneficiary at that time, decedent had not intended by letter to create an irrevocable trust, the presumption of revocability arising from form of deposit controlled, and beneficiary was not entitled to money formerly deposited in account.—In re Ingels' Estate, 92 A.2d 881, 372 Pa. 171.

Transferor or third person

An enforceable trust is created where personal property is transferred pursuant to an oral agreement whereby the transferee promises to hold the goods, securities, or money in trust for the benefit of the transferor or a third person, and all of transferor's statements made to trustee previous to acceptance of trust are deemed to be a part of the declaration of trust.—Coombs v. Particular transactions

(1) Where plaintiff and defendant bought a dry-cleaning machine under conditional sale contract and thereafter entered into a contract whereby defendant was to operate machine on his own account until he could find a buyer at a price sufficient to pay the balance due conditional seller and return amount paid by plaintiff into business, contract created a trust in the property for beneficial interest of plaintiff.—Masters v. Chambers, 4 So.2d 261, 241 Ala. 623, a person has or accepts possession of personal property, with the express or implied understanding that he is not to hold it as his own absolute property, but is to hold and apply it for certain specified purposes or for the benefit of certain specified persons.

Subject to general rules as to the essentials of an express trust, where a person has or accepts possession of personal property, with the express or implied understanding that he is not to hold it as his own absolute property, but is to hold and apply it for certain specified purposes or for the benefit of certain specified persons, a valid and enforceable express trust exists.⁹⁵ Such a trust will be enforced in the absence of fraud, regardless of whether it was voluntary or based on a consideration.⁹⁶ This rule has been applied to the delivery of money,⁹⁷ and also to the delivery of such personal property as

as bailee,¹² pledgee,¹³ or stakeholder.¹⁴ So also, it has been held that no trust is created where the transaction constitutes a sale with an assumption by the buyer of the seller's obligation to deliver part of the property to a third person,¹⁵ or with an agreement for resale to the seller under certain conditions.¹⁶ The fact that one person has collected money for another and has it in his possession does not, without more, establish a trust relationship between them.¹⁷

A person dealing with a stockbroker by depositing securities with him is not as a general rule creating an express trust by such an arrangement nor has he such intention,¹⁸ and it has been held that where a claimant placed certain sums of money in the custody of a realty broker on his promise to invest the money together with his own money but did not undertake to guarantee the return of principal, and the money invested was lost, the relationship between the claimant and the broker was that of customer and broker, and not that of trustee and beneficiary, and claimant assumed risks involved in investments.¹⁹

Trust or debt. No trust is created where the transaction merely creates a debtor and creditor relationship,²⁰ as where the transaction is in the nature of a loan.²¹ Where one person pays money to another, it depends on the manifested intention of the parties whether a trust or a debt is created.²² If the intention is that the money shall be kept or used as a separate fund for the benefit of the payor or a third person, a trust is created.²³ Where, however, the intention is that the person receiving the money shall have the unrestricted use thereof, being liable to pay a similar amount,²⁴ with or without interest,²⁵ to the payor or to a third person, a debt is created. The intention of the parties will be ascertained by a consideration of their words and

Fiscal agency

Generally, a trust does not arise in moneys deposited with a fiscal agency for the purpose of receiving interest on coupons of corporate obligations unless an express trust agreement is entered into for that purpose.—*Finn v. conduct in the light of surrounding circumstances.²⁶ Some of the circumstances which may be important in determining the intention of the parties are the presence or absence of an agreement to pay interest on the money paid,²⁷ the amount of money paid,²⁸ the time which is to elapse before the payee is to be called on to perform his agreement,²⁹ the relative financial situation of the parties,³⁰ their respective callings,³¹ and the usage or custom in such or similar transactions.³²

Contract provision

Provision in dealer-contracts requiring written notice of cancellation and giving company thirty days thereafter in which to refund deposits by dealers to secure performance did not necessarily indicate that such deposits created debtor-creditor relationships, rather than trust relationships.—People v. Pierce, 243 P.2d 585, 110 Cal.App.2d 598.

Marital relationship

Proof of marital relationship did not establish a fiduciary relationship essential to establishment of a trust between the parties with respect to money paid over by wife to husband, but the marital status implied a confidential relationship which was to be considered along with other circumstances as it reflected upon the fiduciary relation and ultimate question as to what was the understanding between the parties when money was given to husband.—Norris v. Payment of interest as creating debt relationship

(1) An undertaking that party to whom money is paid by other party thereto shall pay interest on such money at fixed or current rate, not merely such interest as money being invested may earn, practically always creates a debt, not a trust relationship, as interest is paid for use of money and party paying interest is entitled to use money for his own purposes, in absence of definite contrary understanding.—Norman v. Judy, Ky., 251 S.W.2d 467.

(2) One given money by another, with understanding that recipient should pay interest thereon pending his investment thereof in securities

Gift

Where an unmarried woman who lived with and supported a man was informed that she could not become beneficiary in insurance policies on his life, but that same result could be obtained by a gift of policies to her, after issuance of policy a trust arose in her favor.—Jenkins v. Hill, 96 P.2d 168, 35 Cal.App.2d 521.

Indemnity

Where life policy was procured by decedent in pursuance of an agreement on his part to take it out as indemnity of a surety on his note, proceeds of policy in the hands of the administrator on decedent's death were subject to a parol trust or equitable lien for payment of the note.—Winston v. Winston, 4 So.2d 730, 242 Ala. 45.

Payment for medical services

Wife's promise to pay physician for services to husband from proceeds of benefit certificate of insurance on his life, when collected by her as beneficiary, created trust in her for physician's benefit.—Rape v. Gardner, Tex.Civ.App., 54 S.W.2d 594.

Reimbursement for premiums

(1) A transfer of policies to persons as beneficiaries solely for the purpose of affording them security for repayment of advancements on account of premiums paid, and payment of the insurance to them, created a trust in favor of wife of insured who was beneficiary formerly named in the policies, for so much of the insurance received by the persons as was not required to reimburse them for the premiums paid.—Hayward v. Campbell, 199 A. 530, 174 Md. 540.

(2) Assignment of life policy to party who subsequently disclaimed agreement between the insured and the designated beneficiary,³⁵ or the actual beneficiary,³⁶ that such beneficiary shall pay over to a third person part or all of the proceeds. While it has been held that such a trust cannot be created without the knowledge or consent of the person who became a beneficiary under the terms of the life insurance policy,³⁷ it has also been held that a trust may be created for another than the designated beneficiary where that is the intention of the insured although the designated beneficiary has no knowledge that he is so designated until after the death of the insured,³⁸ and his consent to act as trustee had not been obtained.³⁹

It is no objection to a trust with respect to such proceeds that it is not created wholly by one written instrument, but is created by two or more, which are retained by the insured during his life,⁴⁰ or is created partly by a written instrument and partly by oral declarations.⁴¹ The fact that the trust fund in such case is contingent does not prevent the creation of a trust.⁴² There is, however, authority for the view that the creation by the insured of a trust in proceeds, without change of beneficiary, in order to be binding on the designated beneficiary, must be before, or contemporaneous with, the issuance of the policy.⁴³ Printed matter in a policy indicating that the proceeds are to be held in trust must, it has been held, yield to an intention of the insured to the contrary shown by written matter contained in the application for insurance which is by an express provision of the policy made a part of the contract.⁴⁴ In any event, the requisites of a trust must exist,⁴⁵ and a mere voluntary executory agreement to execute a trust in future may not be given effect as a created trust.⁴⁶

any interest in the policy except for premiums paid and stated that remainder of proceeds from policy was to go to insured's wife, who was named as beneficiary, and her two boys, such declarations, being uncontradicted, created a trust, particularly where declarations were attended by corroborating circumstances, including assignee's deposit of proceeds of policy in separate account in same bank in which he maintained his personal account.—In re Free's Estate, 194 A 492, 327 Pa 362.

Parks*, 156 S.W.2d 480, 288 Ky. 435.

(2) In suit by insured's creditors after death of insured, insurance trust created by insured was valid, even though insured depositing policies with trustee and agreeing to make trustee beneficiary reserved right to change beneficiary, borrow money on policies, use them as security, receive dividends thereon, and surrender any policy for cash value, and insured had right to terminate, modify, or amend agreement.—*Gurnett v. § 57. Property Devised, Bequeathed, or Inherited

An express trust may be created by a promise by a devisee or legatee that he will devote his devise or legacy to a certain lawful purpose.

A trust may be impressed on property devised or bequeathed by an express provision in the will that the devisee or legatee shall hold and apply it for another person, as for his support.⁴⁷ While it has been held or recognized that a trust may be created by a promise, either express or implied, by the devisee or legatee, that he will devote his devise or legacy to a certain lawful purpose,⁴⁸ which promise induces the testator either to make a will or to change or not to change one theretofore made,⁴⁹ and such a trust has specifically been designated an express trust,⁵⁰ it seems that, usually, where a trust arises in such cases, it is treated as a constructive trust or trust ex maleficio, as discussed infra § 148.

In any event, the essentials of an express trust must be present in order to create such a trust, based on an alleged contract between a testator and a person taking under the will⁵¹ or on directions of the testator not contained in the will.⁵² No trust is created by a simple declaration of a person named as beneficiary, to the testator, of the intention to make a future gift to a third person of property to be received under the will,⁵³ or by a promise to the testator, made by a legatee and designated executor, other than the residuary legatee, to make a future gift to a certain person of property which, under the will, goes to the residuary legatee.⁵⁴ So it has been held that a will giving all the property of the testator to his wife cannot be varied or contradicted by proof of an alleged oral agreement that the wife shall hold in trust for others.⁵⁵

A person does not make himself a trustee by executing a will making provision for certain persons and reciting an agreement by one of such persons as to how such one will dispose of the property to be received under the will.⁵⁶ A joint will of two persons giving the income of their property to the survivor for life and providing for the disposal of the property on the death of the survivor does not constitute each the trustee of his own property,⁵⁷ but the survivor becomes the trustee

Absence of duty to perform

Where lawyer by will gave all his property to his wife to do with as she chose, and evidence showed that it was lawyer's intention that the trust, which he provided for by oral agreement with his wife, to the effect that one-half of the property should go to his family on her death, was made wholly dependent on the will of his wife, such trust would not be imposed on the property at insistence of lawyer's relatives, although wife failed to make testamentary provision for them.—Williams v. Bartlett, Tex.Civ.App., 254 S.W.2d 559, error refused no reversible error.

Effect of statute

A testatrix, procuring letters from her children, assuring her that if any portion of her estate, not effectually disposed of by her will, passed to them under provisions thereof, it would be given by them to named charitable institutions on same terms as gifts of testatrix's residuary personal estate to such institutions by will, did not impose trust on property receivable by children under will by reason of their invocation of statute prohibiting testamentary gifts to charity in excess of fifty per cent of testator's gross estate less debts.—In re Watson's Estate, 30 N.Y.S.2d 577, 177 Misc. 308.

Property involved

A trust could not be declared in realty willed by husband who had executed an instrument of a property settlement with his wife whereby they agreed to convey property to each other and that each should convey property to their children reserving a life estate, where such agreement referred only to property which husband owned or possessed at the time of execution of agreement and record failed to show when property willed was acquired by husband.—Muhlhoff v. Parker, 78 P.2d 1045, 26 Cal.App.2d 107.

of the personal estate of the deceased testator.⁵⁸ Where a person destroys his will so that another may take absolutely property which such other would not be entitled to take under the will, a mere expression by such person of a wish that such other should, on the latter's death, dispose of the property does not create a trust.⁵⁹ An agreement of a person to pay his debt out of property which will come to him from another on the latter's death does not create a trust with respect to such property when received.⁶⁰

Agreements after death of testator or intestate.

In order that a trust may be created with respect to property which has passed as a decedent estate, the essentials of a trust must exist,⁶¹ and it has been held that a mere voluntary agreement for the creation of a trust, as long as it remains executory, will not be given effect as a trust.⁶² A person who has no interest in such property may not create a trust with respect to the property.⁶³ Persons taking property as the result of the death of the deceased owner may create a trust by an express or implied agreement that one of them shall hold for their benefit.⁶⁴ So, also, by agreement among persons interested in the estate, a third person may be constituted a trustee for one of the persons interested.⁶⁵ Likewise, a trust may be created by a contract for the settlement of a threatened contest of a will.⁶⁶ An agreement by a party to a contract to hold his interest in personal property of a decedent's estate as collateral security for the benefit of the other party to the contract creates a trust.⁶⁷ An absolute conveyance for a valuable consideration of an interest in property of a decedent's estate to others who also have an interest does not, however, create an express trust in the absence of any provision therefor in the instrument of conveyance or otherwise.⁶⁸

Among other agreements or transactions by which a trust has been created in property passing as a decedent's estate are an assignment by a beneficiary under a will, of his interest thereunder to the executor with directions to the latter to pay or have expended, or invested yearly to, or for, such beneficiary's children what would be due such beneficiary,⁶⁹ an agreement by an executor to pay a legacy in monthly installments,⁷⁰ and a contract between a person, designated and subsequently qualifying as executor, and another pursuant to which the latter collects money belonging to the estate and holds it for the benefit of the estate.⁷¹ On the other hand, a trust is not created by a mere promise by an administrator to pay the administrator of another estate a debt owing to the latter's intestate from the former's intestate out of the proceeds of the sale of certain real property,⁷² or by a promise to claimant to pay a claim against the estate, but of the property devised.⁷³

§ 58. Transactions between Persons in Confidential, Fiduciary, or Family Relation

A trust may arise out of the nature and terms of transactions or agreements where the parties are related by blood or marriage, or occupy some confidential or fiduciary relationship.

Husband and wife

(1) Conveyance of realty by husband to wife, with understanding that wife would hold title for her benefit of husband and would reconvey property on husband's request, created a trust relationship.—Swallows v. Swallows, 201 P.2d 23, 89 Cal.App.2d 458.

(2) A property settlement providing for monthly payments to divorced wife during husband's lifetime, and on his death for the purchase of annuities at a designated cost by the executor of husband's will for the wife's benefit, created an irrevocable trust in favor of the wife.—In re Belknap's Estate, 152 P.2d 657, 68 Cal.App.2d 644.

some confidential or fiduciary relationship.⁷⁵ In this connection, a fiduciary relationship exists where confidence is reposed on one side and resulting superiority and influence on the other,⁷⁶ and it has been held that mere friendship does not constitute a confidential relationship in the absence of a showing of the exercise of undue influence.⁷⁷ In order to create an express trust in such a case the essentials of a trust must exist,⁷⁸ including the intention to create a trust,⁷⁹ and certainty.⁸⁰ Such transactions are not to be confused with those creating or intending to create some relation other than that of trustee and cestui que trust,⁸¹ and the facts in some cases, although involving transactions between persons related to each other, or occupying confidential relations, have been held insufficient to create an express trust, but to create, at the most, a mere agency⁸² or a debt.⁸³

§ 59. Agreements, or Transactions, Creating or Intended to Create Other Relations

Particular agreements or transactions have been held not to constitute a trust, but some other relationship such as that of debtor and creditor or principal and agent.

While the fact that an agreement creates a relationship other than a trust does not necessarily prevent the existence of a trust relationship also,⁸⁴

(3) Under separation agreement providing that, on death of husband or wife, all of property of either would go to survivor and that on death of survivor, property would go to their children, the husband and wife each became a trustee one for the other, and both for the heirs named as beneficiaries in the agreement.—Sonnicksen v. Sonnicksen, 113 P.2d 495, 45 Cal.App.2d 46

(4) Where husband, at request of wife, turned over funds to her for setting up housekeeping on her promise to return on demand any money left over and on her representation that money would thereby be protected if husband encountered business difficulties, a trust was created in so far as funds were to be used for setting up housekeeping.—Levy v. Levy, 35 N.E.2d 659, 309 Mass. 486.

(5) Where divorced husband deposited sum with court to be paid to wife for care of parties' children and thereafter on parties' joint petition divorce petition was vacated and parties' used sum deposited for purchase of a farm, title to which was taken by parties jointly, conveyance was in trust for parties' children.—Stretch v. Watson, 74 A.2d 597, 5 N.J. 268.

in cases of voluntary settlement or gifts the court will not impute a trust where a trust is not in fact the thing contemplated,⁸⁵ and the courts, in many cases, have held or recognized that the agreement or transaction under consideration created, not a trust, but another relation.⁸⁶ Thus, particular agreements or transactions have been held not to create a trust but an ordinary contract relationship,⁸⁷ such as that of debtor and creditor,⁸⁸ or the relationship of assignor and assignee,⁸⁹ landlord and tenant,⁹⁰ mortgagor and mortgagee,⁹¹ principal and agent,⁹² or vendor and purchaser or seller

So, also, it has been held that a trust is not created where there is merely an agreement of a debtor to apply to the payment of the debt money to be received by him on the sale of his property,⁹⁴ or a combination or quasi partnership of creditors for the purpose of realizing something from the insolvent estate of their debtor;⁹⁵ and the members of a committee representing creditors merely for the purpose of supervising the business of the debtor who continues business and retains possession of the property involved are not trustees.⁹⁶ Likewise, an absolute and perfect gift for the sole benefit of the donee does not create a trust,⁹⁷ nor does a by-law of a town with respect to the application of certain money, which may be changed or repealed at the option of the town, and which does not constitute a contract with individuals.⁹⁸ A deed to one for life with provision that thereafter the property should revert back to the grantor's estate for distribution among the grantor's next of kin does not create a trust.⁹⁹

The fact that an agreement or instrument was intended to create some relationship other than that of trust, but is insufficient to do so, does not alone authorize the court to construe it to be a declaration of trust.¹ Thus, the court will not, unless all the elements of a trust are present, convert into a declaration of trust an imperfectly executed will² or an imperfect gift.³ There is, however, authority for the view that an imperfect gift may be enforced as a trust when it possesses all the elements of a trust,⁴ and it has been held that where a gift is incomplete by reason of some technicality in the law and where the essential elements of a trust are established, the manifest intention of the donor may be sustained through the agency of a trust.⁵ A mere voluntary executory agreement for the creation of a trust is not enforceable as a trust.⁶ Where the existence of a trust in certain property depends on the performance by the prospective beneficiary of certain acts, no trust arises in the absence of such performance.⁷

Want of delivery

The courts are reluctant to extend the doctrine of declaration of trust in cases where an attempt has been made to make a gift, which for want of delivery is imperfect.—In re Solot's Estate, 60 N.Y.S.2d 401, affirmed 55 N.Y.S.2d 125, 269 App.Div. 759.

Savings account

Transaction whereby donor sent letter to bank directing bank to transfer donor's savings account to his sister, which inclosed passbook indorsed over to sister, which was unenforceable as gift inter vivos because letter was not received by the bank prior to donor's death by suicide, was not enforceable as declaration of trust, since gift of equitable or beneficial title must be as complete and effectual in case of trust as is gift of thing itself in gift inter vivos.—Pikeville Nat. 5. ACCEPTANCE OR DECLARATION OF TRUST AND TRANSFER OF TITLE AND POSSESSION

§ 60. Acceptance and Disclaimer by Trustee

- a. Acceptance
- b. Disclaimer

a. Acceptance

While an express trust cannot be imposed on one who does not accept it, as a general rule the trustee's assent is not necessary in order to render the trust valid.

An express trust cannot be imposed on one who does not, expressly or by implication, accept it,⁸ especially where the terms of the trust are such that the duties imposed are or may become burdensome.⁹ An acceptance of the office by a trustee is necessary in order to constitute him trustee¹⁰ and to vest title in him.¹¹ However, his assent is not necessary in order to render the trust valid,¹² and his refusal to accept does not defeat the trust,¹³ since equity will not allow a trust to fail for want of a trustee, as discussed infra § 217, although a provision of a trust instrument which makes the operative effect dependent on the decision of the trustee may be given effect.¹⁴

Acceptance of a trust, created by will, deed, or other instrument, is ordinarily presumed¹⁵ until the contrary is shown,¹⁶ especially after a long lapse of

Power to deal with property as trustee

Where inter vivos trust instrument was executed by grantor on July 11, 1929, but was not accepted in writing and acknowledged by named trustees until July 25, 1929, the trust instrument did not become effective until acceptance of the trust by trustees and the transfer to them as

Beneficiary of insurance policy as trustee

(1) Where deceased's son was substituted as beneficiary of life insurance policies for purpose of having son collect insurance and distribute it to certain persons named in letter written by deceased addressed to son and found among deceased's effects after his death and son collected proceeds of the policy after he had knowledge of the trust created, it was not necessary to have notified the trustee and obtained his consent before designating him as such, and the son was held to be trustee.—Carter v. Carter, 184 A.78, 321 Pa. 391.

(2) Where insured designated his brother as beneficiary, and although he did not inform his brother, stated to others that he took out the insurance for the benefit of his wife and had put it in the brother's name because his wife was a minor but that his brother would carry out his intentions, and the brother collected the insurance, it was not necessary that deceased should have notified his brother and obtained his consent before naming him.—Donithen v. Where trustor invested money in an investment certificate of a building and loan association which certi-

have a successor appointed, after a long lapse of time, has been regarded as sufficient to prove that there had previously been an acceptance.³⁰

Acceptance furnishes a consideration for the enforcement of the trust against the trustee.³¹ It is not essential that the acceptance of the trust deed occur at the time of its execution,³² and delay in acceptance for a substantial period does not necessarily prevent a subsequent acceptance.³³ Where a contract provides for the transfer to a third person as trustee property of the parties to the contract and imposes certain obligations on such third person, the latter's agreement to accept the trust if certain substantial modifications in the terms are made does not constitute an acceptance.³⁴

Joining in execution of trust deed. Acceptance may be established by, or implied from, the trustee's joining in the execution of the trust deed,³⁵ and the view has been taken that the proper way to manifest an acceptance is to join in the execution of the deed,³⁶ that such joinder may be necessary where the instrument contains covenants to be made and executed by the trustee,³⁷ and that, under certain circumstances, the trust may not be complete until the trust instrument is accepted and executed by the trustee.³⁸ In general, however, the trustee is not confined to this mode of acceptance³⁹ even,

according to some cases, although the deed creating the trust provides for the trustee's acceptance thereof by signing the deed.⁴⁰

Estoppel. According to some decisions, by the acceptance of the trust property or any part thereof the trustee becomes estopped to deny his acceptance of the trust.⁴¹

Relation back. Acceptance relates back to the date of the trust instrument.⁴²

b. Disclaimer

While it is generally recognized that one who has accepted a trust may not at will disclaim or renounce it,⁴³ in general, prior to acceptance, a person designated as trustee may renounce or disclaim the trust.⁴⁴ In order to constitute a renunciation there must be an express rejection or a tacit refusal to act,⁴⁵ and there can be no renunciation where the person designated as trustee is ignorant of the existence of the instrument creating the trust.⁴⁶ Renunciation may, however, be by deed⁴⁷ or other written instrument,⁴⁸ by matter of record,⁴⁹ or by an answer in chancery.⁵⁰ There is authority for the view that formal disclaimer or renunciation is not necessary,⁵¹ although an informal disclaimer should be unequivocal.⁵² It has been laid down that a formal deed of disclaimer need not be made.⁵³ Disclaimer may be shown or established by the conduct or acts of the person designated as trustee⁵⁴ or by nonaction long continued.⁵⁵

Conditional acceptance as disclaimer. The imposition by the trustee of a condition on which he will accept the trust, the condition not being inconsistent with the trust expressed, is not equivalent to a disclaimer.⁵⁶

Failure to qualify. Long continued failure to qualify by a person designated as a testamentary trustee may be sufficient to constitute a declination of the trust,⁵⁷ and, under some statutes, failure of a person designated as a testamentary trustee to give a bond required by statute may constitute a disclaimer or declination.⁵⁸ Notwithstanding some statutes of this general type, however, it has been held or recognized that the failure of persons nominated as trustees to procure their formal appointment as trustees by the probate court and to give bonds does not conclusively show that they had declined to act in that capacity,⁵⁹ that failure to furnish a bond does not operate as a declination where it does not appear that the persons designated were required or requested to furnish a bond,⁶⁰ and that the delay in giving a bond which may be treated as a declination under some statutes does not usually occur until the duty to file the bond arises.⁶¹

Retraction. While there is authority for the view that a person designated as testamentary trustee may retract his renunciation of the trust at any time before letters are granted to another,⁶² such person may not retract after his renunciation has been accepted by a court having jurisdiction and another has been appointed as administrator,⁶³ or, it has been held, after the other trustees designated have entered on their duties.⁶⁴

Partial disclaimer or renunciation. Where there are two distinct independent trusts, the person designated as trustee may accept one and renounce the other,⁶⁵ unless the settlor has manifested an intention that he must accept both or neither.⁶⁶

Effect of disclaimer. Disclaimer or refusal to accept on the part of the person designated as trustee does not defeat the trust;⁶⁷ it protects such person against responsibilities which he is not willing to assume.⁶⁸ It has been laid down broadly that by the proper refusal or disclaimer of a trust all parties are placed precisely in the same position relative to the trust property as if the disclaiming party had not been named in the trust instrument.⁶⁹ While it has been held that no title passes to a trustee named in a deed where he refuses to accept the trust,⁷⁰ it has been laid down in general terms that, after renunciation by a person designated as trustee by a will and pending the appointment of a new trustee, the legal title to land covered by the trust is not in abeyance,⁷¹ and that, if the sole trustee or all the trustees disclaim a devise of land in trust, the legal title will not vest in the heirs of the deviser,⁷² but nominally vests in the trustees designated by the testator.⁷³ In general, where one of two or more trustees refuses to accept, the estate vests in the others as though the trustee refusing were dead or had not been named.⁷⁴ Title to mon-

a. Knowledge of, and Acceptance

It is not essential to the existence of a valid trust and the right of the beneficiary to enforce it that he have knowledge thereof at the time of its creation, or that the creator should notify the beneficiary of the existence of the trust.

It is not essential to the existence of a valid trust and the right of the beneficiary to enforce it that he have knowledge thereof at the time of its creation,⁷⁷ or that the creator should notify the beneficiary of the existence of the trust.⁷⁸ So it is not necessary that the beneficiary should consent to the creation of,⁷⁹ or expressly accept,⁸⁰ the trust.

(3) However, it has also been held that in order for a beneficiary of a trust to create a valid trust of his equitable interest in the original trust, for the benefit of a third person, no notice to the third person is necessary even though trust instrument is in possession of another person as trustee, since notice is not necessary except in certain restricted cases of which this is not one.—Stern v. (3) However, where a trust was voluntary but the donor had not parted with possession of the property, the court in deciding the case, held that where a trust was voluntary the law required at least an implied acceptance by the cestui que trust in order to perfect the creation of the trust.—Murray v. Express acceptance shown

Trust created by deposit with bank of writing obligatory for payment of money to be given to obligee upon obligor's death was accepted by obligee during obligor's life, where obligee wrote to bank requesting that instrument be put in safe deposit vault until he called for it.—Citizens' Nat. Bank of Pocomoke City v. Par-

As a general rule acceptance by the beneficiary will be presumed⁸¹ because of benefit derived by him under the trust,⁸² but this presumption may be rebutted⁸³ and does not operate where the trust imposes onerous conditions in consideration of the benefits conferred.⁸⁴ Where such conditions are imposed, the cestui que trust will not be bound unless he assents or accepts.⁸⁵ Although notice is not essential to the existence of a trust it is of great importance in determining the real intent of the alleged declarant.⁸⁶ Failure to notify the beneficiary,⁸⁷ or his nonacceptance,⁸⁸ is evidence that the owner does not intend immediately to create a trust,⁸⁹ and is also evidence that, although a trust is created, the owner reserves the right to revoke it.⁹⁰

Sufficiency of acceptance. The bringing of an action by the beneficiary to enforce the trust is a sufficient acceptance,⁹¹ as is also the appointment of an attorney in fact to protect the interests of the beneficiary.⁹² While, where several beneficiaries are provided for and the consent of all is required, consent of one is not sufficient,⁹³ the view has been taken that, where one beneficiary accepts a deed of trust, the validity of the instrument and his right to enforce it are not affected by the fact that another beneficiary has not accepted it and that the latter's rights are an open question.⁹⁴

Relation back of acceptance. Acceptance of the trust by the cestui que trust when he learns of the trust relates back to the date of the declaration.⁹⁵

b. Rejection or Renunciation

In general property cannot be forced on a designated cestui que trust against his will and he may reject or renounce the trust.

While, in the case of a spendthrift trust created by will, it has been held that an attempted renunciation by the cestui que trust is ineffective⁹⁶ and does not terminate the trust, as discussed infra § 95, in general property cannot be forced on a designated cestui que trust against his will;⁹⁷ he may reject or renounce the trust⁹⁸ and a valid trust does not exist if the cestui que trust, when informed of it, clearly and unequivocally rejects or renounces its benefits.⁹⁹ It has been laid down in general terms that any equitable rights arising from a declaration of trust are at an end after renunciation by the cestui que trust.¹

There is a sufficient renunciation or rejection where the cestui que trust prosecutes to judgment a pending suit against the creator of the trust where the cestui que trust's position in such suit is inconsistent with his claiming under the trust,² or where he claims the entire property as the sole heir of a person other than the creator.³ If the settlor has

Although there is authority to the contrary, in respect of a deposit in the name of the depositor in trust for another, or in the name of the depositor or creator and the beneficiary, knowledge on the part of the beneficiary of the fact of the deposit is not necessary to create a trust, and it is not essential that the beneficiary express an acceptance of the trust or deposit.

In respect of trusts in bank deposits, the fact that the alleged beneficiary is not notified may negative the intention to create a trust,⁷ and, in respect of deposits in the name of the depositor in trust for another, the view has apparently been taken in some cases that communication of the fact of the deposit to the beneficiary is usually necessary evidence of the creation of the trust,⁸ so that if the beneficiary is ignorant of the existence of the trust, he has no claim on the deposit after the trustee's death.⁹ On the other hand, the view usually taken is that want of notice to the beneficiary is not conclusive¹⁰ and that, in the case of a deposit in the name of the depositor in trust for another, knowledge on the part of the beneficiary,¹¹ or the depositor's notice to the beneficiary,¹² of the fact of the deposit is not necessary to create, or to evidence the existence of, a trust, and the beneficiary can claim it, even though he did not know of the trust in the settlor's lifetime.¹³ So, also, knowledge on the part of the beneficiary is not necessary in the case of a deposit in the name of the depositor or creator and the beneficiary¹⁴ or in the case of a deposit in the name of the beneficiary with right of depositor to draw.¹⁵ The giving of notice to the beneficiary by the owner of the deposit may indicate conclusively that a trust exists.¹⁶ It is not essential to the validity of a trust in savings bank deposits that the beneficiary express an acceptance of it,¹⁷ and where the beneficiary knows of the deposit, especially by the trustee's express announcement, he is entitled thereto.¹⁸

the legal title, as, for example, where delivery of personal property to a person is relied on as creating an express trust and constituting such person a trustee.²⁴ In order to create a trust fund the fund must be set aside either actually or constructively,²⁵ and the fund or other property must be so designated as to permit the passing of title to the trustee.²⁶ Where the settlor has retained legal title to the property in himself, it has been held essential that equitable title to the property must pass im-

Conveyance held sufficient

A trust agreement transferring, conveying, and assigning to the trustee all the property of the grantor of whatsoever kind, and giving the trustee power to sell any property, real or personal, was sufficient as a conveyance of realty.—Jackson v. Pillsbury, 44 N.E.2d 537, 380 Ill. 554.

Divestment of title

By executing deeds creating trusts, settlor divested himself of title and transferred it to others, notwithstanding reservation of power of revocation, although such power accompanying delivery would nullify gift.—Burnet v. Guggenheim, N.Y., 53 S.Ct. 369, 238 U.S. 280, 77 L.Ed. 748.

Method of devolution of title is immaterial and legal title for a valid gift in trust can be conveyed to trustee inter vivos or causa mortis or by any other legal method for transfer of title to a donee personally.—Gray v. Watters, 61 N.W.2d 885, 243 Iowa 430.

Possessory interest

While trustee need not have legal title to the subject matter of trust, he must have something more than a mere possessory interest.—Wise v. Delaware Steeplechase & Race Ass'n, Del., 45 A.2d 547, 165 A.L.R. 830.

Real property

In order to create active trust in land, whether spendthrift or ordinary trust, legal title to and right to possession of land must be vested in trustee.—Long v. Long, Tex.Civ. App., 252 S.W.2d 235, error refused no reversible error.

Gratuitous assignment of rights under contract

Rule that if title to property of intended inter vivos gift in trust does not pass to intended third-party trustee for want of delivery of subject matter or for want of delivery of instrument of conveyance, no trust is created, and title of property remains in owner free of trust, is applicable to gratuitous assignment in trust of rights under a contract.—Cooney v. Equitable Life Assurance Soc. of U. S., 51 N.W.2d 285, 235 Minn. 377.

Retention of legal title by finance company

Where finance company for which automobile is held "in trust" retains legal title under trust receipt agreement, no trust is created, since legal title in a true trust vests in the trustee.—Handy v. C. I. T. Corporation, 197 N.E. 64, 291 Mass. 157, 101 A.L.R. 447.

It is not necessary that title should expressly be given to the trustee;²⁸ title passes by implication when involved in the general scheme and intent of the trust.²⁹ Mere informality does not prevent a bill of sale from being sufficient to pass the legal title and uphold a trust declared in a separate instrument.³⁰ Where the settlor has only an equitable interest, the transfer of that interest is necessary.³¹ If there is no transfer of legal title or equitable interest, a transfer of some power over the property, such as the power of sale, is required.³²

Transfer of beneficial interest and separation of legal and beneficial or equitable title While it has been laid down in broad terms that there must be a separation of the legal title and beneficial enjoyment,³³ this apparently means that the whole legal title and the whole equitable or beneficial title or interest may not be vested in one person,³⁴ and, as thus limited, the rule has been recognized in stating that the same person cannot at the same time, as trustee, possess the entire legal title and, as cestui que trust, the entire equitable title;³⁵ but, in some jurisdictions at least, a person may hold as trustee for himself and for others, as discussed infra § 210. Where the owner of property constitutes himself a trustee for another, there must be a complete transfer of the equitable title to the property to the beneficiary.³⁶

b. Delivery of Trust Instrument or Declaration

While under certain conditions, delivery to the trustee of the trust instrument may be a necessary element of a complete trust, it has been held that there is no need of delivery, and the instrument creating the trust need not be delivered to the cestui que trust or anyone else in order to be effective.

While the view has been expressed that, under certain conditions, delivery to the trustee of the trust instrument executed by the creator is a necessary element of a complete trust,³⁷ it has been held that there is no need of delivery,³⁸ and the instrument creating the trust need not be delivered to the cestui que trust³⁹ or anyone⁴⁰ in order to be effective; and a declaration constituting the owner trustee of such property need not be delivered to anyone, as discussed infra § 64. In order that delivery of an alleged declaration of trust to an alleged trustee may be effective, it must appear that

Insurance policy

Where there was no delivery by insured, under accident and health policy providing death benefits payable to insured's estate, of trust indenture, purporting to assign policy, directly to trustee named in indenture, and only delivery of the indenture was to insurer and there was no evidence that insurer in receiving indenture purported to act in behalf of trustee or beneficiaries named in indenture, purported trust based on the assignment failed for lack of delivery of the indenture, hence insured could thereafter require insurer to recognize another change of beneficiary, even though insurer had changed beneficiary in response to insured's first request.—Silbert v. the alleged creator intended to create a trust.⁴¹ Manual delivery is unnecessary⁴² and is of but little legal significance where a binding agreement is signed by both the creator and trustee,⁴³ and the trustee's written acceptance of the terms and provisions of a trust agreement constitutes sufficient delivery.⁴⁴ Delivery of a bill of sale of personal property to a trustee may, it seems, be made through a third person.⁴⁵

Trust deed of real property. Where the subject of the trust is real property, title thereto can be vested only by a deed of conveyance.⁴⁶ Rules determining the requisites and validity of deeds of real property in general, as discussed in Deeds §§ 10-70 apply where the trust res is real property and it is sought to transfer the title by deed.⁴⁷ Thus, the instrument must contain operative words of conveyance.⁴⁸ While the necessity for the delivery and acceptance of the trust deed has been recognized,⁴⁹ the delivery of a trust deed of real property need not be a formal one;⁵⁰ delivery to one of several trustees may be sufficient,⁵¹ and delivery need not be made directly to the trustee; it may be made through a third person.⁵² While there is a prima facie delivery of such a deed where it is handed to the trustee,⁵³ the trustee need not receive or have physical possession of the deed,⁵⁴ and any acts or words which clearly manifest the trustor's intention to consummate his deed and to part unconditionally with it and with all control over it are sufficient to constitute delivery from which acceptance may be implied.⁵⁵ Although the mere signing, acknowledging, and recording of the trust deed by the trustor has been held insufficient to impart validity to the trust deed unless the trustor delivered the deed to the trustee,⁵⁶ and delivery of the trust deed to the clerk of the court for recording of itself, without the prior consent of the trustee, is not a delivery but merely affirmative evidence thereof,⁵⁷ there is a sufficient delivery where a party executes a deed, directs that it be delivered and recorded, and the grantee consents to accept the deed,⁵⁸ or where the deed is executed in due form, recorded, and placed in the hands of the trustee.

Delivery ineffective

Where record showed that trust indenture which was delivered to trust company, whose representative by mistake failed to destroy it as subsequently directed, was an earlier draft which was never accepted nor acted on by parties, neither company nor any other party acquired any rights as result of such delivery.—Randall v. Randall, D.C.Fla., 60 F. Supp. 308.

Delivery to third person for trustee

Where a grantor or promisor delivers an instrument to a third person who is not agent of the grantee or promisee and has not been previously designated to receive instrument by parties to instrument, there is good delivery only if grantor or promisor manifests to third person, at time of transfer, intention that third person shall hold the instrument on grantee's or promisee's behalf and the third person accepts instrument on such terms.—Silbert v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of U. S., 50 N.E.2d 57, 314 Mass. 406.

Intention to transfer in future

Where written instrument, stating that money invested in a bond and mortgage belonged to a named person, and that the bond and mortgage should be turned over to such person after maker's death in event it had not already been done, instrument was not enforceable after maker's death as a declaration of trust, notwithstanding maker during his lifetime had delivered instrument to the

Deposit in safe deposit box

Where deed and trust agreement

tee who indorses thereon his acceptance of the trust.⁵⁹ While delivery does not take place the very instant the trustee acquires physical control of the deed where the expressed intention is that delivery shall not occur until a future time,⁶⁰ in general a trust deed takes effect on delivery to the trustee⁶¹ and thereupon the rights of the cestui que trust attach.⁶² The effect of the delivery is not impaired by a mental reservation,⁶³ by an oral condition attached by the grantor to the delivery repugnant to the terms of the deed,⁶⁴ or by a subsequent redelivery of the deed by the trustee to the grantor.⁶⁵ An instrument which vests title in one as trustee, without showing on its face the nature of the trust or the name of the beneficiary, vests the fee in the grantee.⁶⁶

§ 64. Delivery and Possession of Property

Subject to the rule that the donor who constitutes himself trustee may retain possession and control of the property as trustee, the owner must surrender control of the property which he has subjected to the alleged trust, and there should either be delivery to the trustee or the equivalent of delivery, although there is also authority for the view that delivery is not essential.

Subject to the rule recognized in some jurisdictions, at least, that the creator of a trust may reserve the right to revoke the trust, as discussed infra §§ 89, 90, and the rule that the donor or creator who constitutes himself trustee may retain possession and control of the property as trustee, the owner must surrender control of the property which he has subjected to the alleged trust,⁶⁷ at least in so far as his own interest is concerned,⁶⁸ and there is authority for the view that no trust is created where control of the property remains with the alleged creator, although the property is in the possession of another,⁶⁹ or, in general, where the alleged creator retains the absolute right of dealing with, and disposing of, the property for his own benefit.⁷⁰ The transaction is, however, sufficient in this regard where the creator parts with all control inconsistent with the purposes of the trust;⁷¹ and, where a person, intending to give property to another, vests the property in the trustees and declares a trust, the gift is perfected, and the donor loses all dominion over the property.⁷²

Although there is authority for the view that delivery of the trust property is not essential,⁷³ generally, in order to create a completed trust in personal property, there should either be delivery to the trustee, or the equivalent of delivery,⁷⁴ and, executed by decedent were delivered to trustee by decedent at time of execution, deed was recorded and trust agreement was kept in safe deposit box owned jointly by decedent and defendant, delivery was shown—George v. Soares, 128 P.2d 377, 54 Cal. App.2d 29.

Delivery for recording without reservation of control

Trustor's delivery of trust deed to county clerk for recording without reservation of any control thereafter, unconditionally, for use of grantee, in accordance with grantee's previous consent to accept deed and act as trustee, intending it to take effect immediately, is sufficient delivery to pass title to land described therein to grantee as trustee—Hinton's Ex'r v. Life insurance policies

Valid, voluntary trust was created in death benefits under life policies upon delivery of the trust res to trustee and the change of the beneficiary at insured's request to trustee—Mahony v. Crocker, 136 P.2d 810, 58 Cal. App.2d 196.

Trust contingent on death

A donor does not have to divest himself of the legal title or control of property in order to create a trust contingent on his death—Helper State Bank v. Crus, 81 P.2d 359, 95 Utah 320.

where one other than the donor is selected as trustee of a voluntary trust, there must be such a delivery of the property as constitutes a relinquishment of dominion over the property by the donor,⁷⁵ and as will be effectual to transfer the legal title;⁷⁶ as sometimes expressed, there must be actual delivery of the fund or other property or of a legal assignment thereof to the trustee, with the intention of passing legal title to him as trustee.⁷⁷ In other words, in general, it is necessary⁷⁸ and sufficient⁷⁹ that the creator should have done everything which could have been done, the character of the property comprising the trust being considered, to transfer the property to the trustee in such a mode as will be effectual to pass title, although this is not required and the transfer of the property is sufficient if it is made to a third person for the trustee under such circumstances that the donor no longer has any dominion over the property,⁸⁰ or if a sufficient declaration is made by the transferee that he holds the property in trust for another.⁸¹ Thus, in order to make oneself trustee for another of property held by the settlor, everything must be done which can be done to end the absolute dominion of the settlor.⁸²

Delivery of an instrument representing a chose in action may become necessary in order to pass title to a trustee as against creditors and purchasers.⁸³ While usually delivery of personal property to the trustee for the purposes of the trust is sufficient to pass title,⁸⁴ where delivery of personal

Actual or constructive delivery

(1) Since equity, in its recognition of trusts and in the enforcement of them requires the same formalities in passing of the subject matter of the gift as is required at law, actual or constructive delivery is required in the creation of a trust in a third person for the benefit of another.—Schenker v. Moodhe, 200 A. 727, 175 Md. 193.

(2) Evidence that donor mindful of impending death told donee, who had cared for donor, that donee would find a receipt for purchase of lot among donor's papers, that donor directed donee to places where donor had secreted his papers, bank books, and other valuables, and told donee to take keys from donor's trousers, and that donee failed to take them because of warning concerning donor's contagious disease, failed to show a gift in trust, since there was no delivery.—Schenker v. Moodhe, supra.

Delivery or assignment

In order to establish voluntary trust with third person as trustee, there must be delivery of trust property to trustee or assignment passing legal title to him.—Winters v. Winters, 109 P.2d 857, 165 Or 659.

Delivery of copy of executor's conveyance

Where carbon copy of executor's conveyance to trustee of 30 per cent of the revenues reserved to decedent's estate under a former instrument was delivered to trustee while executor kept original, but parties considered that they had done all that was necessary to complete transfer, and conveyance by its terms was presently effective, trial court properly found that conveyance was in full force and disregarded contemporaneous oral condition that conveyance should not take effect until death of executor.—

Mason v. University of the South, Tex. Civ. App., 212 S.W.2d 854, error refused no reversible error.

Shares of stock

An attempted gratuitous transfer of shares of stock by assignment to trustees unaccompanied by delivery or transfer on corporation's books was ineffective, and trust failed for want of a res to support it, since in absence of consideration, implied promise to convey legal title could not be enforced.—Johnson v. Johnson, 13 N.E.2d 788, 300 Mass. 24.

Delivery to agent of donor

In order to create an enforceable trust, the property which is the subject matter thereof must be delivered to another as trustee, and not as agent of the donor.—Ratliff v. Lee, supra.

Disposal of money on donee's property

Where donor went with donee to basement of donee's house and selected spot for burial of money, with the knowledge that house was owned by donees and under their exclusive dominion and control, there was adequate delivery to donee, to create a valid trust.—Gardella v. property to a person is relied on to create a trust and to constitute such person a trustee, the delivery must be made by the alleged creator with intention to vest title in such person for the purpose of creating a trust for the benefit of the alleged beneficiary.⁸⁵ While it has been laid down broadly that possession by the trustee of personal property involved is essential to the creation of a trust,⁸⁶ a failure of the trustee to take actual physical control of the trust property does not defeat the trust, where title is effectually vested in him by a written instrument⁸⁷ or otherwise;⁸⁸ and, where actual delivery is impossible, the formal execution and delivery of an instrument purporting to be a present complete transfer and assignment of such property to a person as trustee is a sufficient delivery of the property therein described to make the transaction an executed, as distinguished from an executory, one.⁸⁹ Where the creator or donor has only an equitable title, only a symbolic delivery to the trustee is possible.⁹⁰

The trust may, however, remain incomplete until the property constituting the corpus of the trust is delivered to the trustee.⁹¹ Thus, failure of the trustee to take possession of personal property may leave the trust incomplete in the absence of a showing of a symbolical delivery,⁹² and, where the trust is a voluntary one in personal property, a change of possession may be necessary to perfect the trust and render it enforceable.⁹³ Where the instrument creating the trust expressly provides that it shall be for the benefit of the grantor during his life, a retention of possession by him is not inconsistent with the trust.⁹⁴

Deposit in safe deposit box. Actual delivery of personal property may be effected by a deposit made by one of the trustees and the creator in a safe deposit box to which the creator does not have access without the consent of the trustees,⁹⁵ and it has been held that the deposit of securities in a safe deposit box to which both the donor and the trustee have access may constitute delivery.⁹⁶ The placing of the trust res in a safe deposit box of which the beneficiary is named as lessee with the donor as his agent may constitute a sufficient delivery of the trust property.⁹⁷ In general, however, placing of securities in a safe deposit box does not, of itself, constitute delivery where the alleged trustee is not given the right of access to such box.⁹⁸

Prior possession by trustee. Where, prior to the creation of the trust, the property is in the hands of the trustee, no formal delivery of the property is required,⁹⁹ and it is not necessary for the creator to withdraw the property and thereafter redeliver it.¹

Delivery to one of several trustees may be sufficient to create a completed trust.²

Delivery of property to cestui que trust. Delivery of the trust property to the cestui que trust is not essential to the valid creation of an express trust,³ even where the creator constitutes himself the trustee.⁴

Retention of possession by creator constituting himself trustee. While the view has been taken that the execution of a present and complete assignment of personal property does not of itself render the assignor a trustee for the designated assignee where the assignor retains both the property and the assignment,⁵ and although the policy of the law in requiring delivery to effect transfer in certain instances may not be evaded by merely calling the transaction a declaration of a trust,⁶ if the creator of the trust by appropriate words or acts fully and completely constitutes himself trustee, no change of possession is necessary,⁷ and he may also retain possession of the instrument creating the trust,⁸ and need not deliver it to the beneficiary.⁹ On the other hand, it has been held that where the creator has never informed the beneficiaries of it, a voluntary trust cannot be created where the creator has attempted to make himself trustee and has kept the property in his own hands, subject to his own disposal.¹⁰

§ 65. Presumptions and Burden of Proof

An intention to create an express trust will not be presumed in the absence of an express declaration to that effect where the whole purpose of the deed or other instrument, without peril to the rights of any person, can be accomplished under the power conferred by the instrument.

An intention to create an express trust will not be presumed in the absence of an express declaration to that effect, where the whole purpose of the deed or other instrument, without peril to the rights of any person, can be accomplished under the power conferred by the instrument.¹² It may be assumed that a valid trust was created when a person takes out shares of a family corporation in his name as trustee for his children.¹³

Oral or written declaration. It will be presumed that an agreement creating a trust in real property was evidenced by writing in conformity with the statute of frauds;¹⁴ and, where an attorney of a corporation judgment creditor bid in the property at execution sale and received a deed in his own name, for the sole purpose of conveying it to the corporation, the trust will be presumed to have been created or declared by deed, as required by statute.¹⁵ Where a complaint does not charge that the trust relied on is in writing or that it rests on an agreement, it will be presumed that it was in parol.¹⁶

Delivery of writing. A legal presumption obtains in favor of delivery of a trust agreement,¹⁷ and the burden of proof rests on the grantor and those claiming under him to show an absence of delivery.¹⁸ Thus, the delivery of a declaration of trust will be presumed where it is produced from the possession of the beneficiary, who is shown to be the proper custodian,¹⁹ and a presumption of delivery of a deed creating a trust arises from the execution and recording thereof.²⁰

Transfer of title. Where property is claimed under a trust imposed on a third person, the burden is on the beneficiary to show that the legal title passed beyond the control of the settlor in his lifetime, to the trustee or beneficiary.²¹

Spendthrift trust. Ordinarily there is a presumption against the creation of a spendthrift trust unless either words to that effect are set forth or a clear and undoubted intention to that end is manifested by terms of the instrument.²²

§ 66. — Existence, Validity, and Terms of Trust in General

There is a strong presumption against the existence of an orally created trust, and one who alleges an express trust has the burden of proving it. Where there is evidence establishing an express trust, favorable presumptions arise, and the burden of proof is on the party disputing its validity or terms.

There is a strong presumption against the existence of an orally created trust,²³ and presumptions which are not the usual and almost necessary deductions from the facts proved may not be indulged to ingraft a parol trust on a legal title.²⁴ Ordinarily, as discussed in Property § 17, a person holding the title or possession of property is presumed to be the absolute owner. consideration, and the parties are strangers, it has been held, on the one hand, that there is a presumption that the grantee holds in trust for the grantor, unless there is evidence establishing a gift,²⁵ but on the other hand the view has been taken that where a transfer of property is made without consideration, no inference that the transferee is to hold the property for the benefit of the transferor arises,²⁶ and that a conveyance for a recited consideration of love and affection is presumptively a gift as distinguished from a trust.²⁷ Furthermore, the omission of covenants of general warranty of title in a deed does not give rise to an inference that the land was to be held in trust for the benefit of the grantor.²⁸ An obligation to give away one's property by means of trust is not to be presumed.²⁹ Where personal property is delivered to, and accepted by, a person, with directions to give it to the donor's husband in trust for their sons, the presumption is that the recipient took the property as trustee or agent for the donees;³⁰ and, where one person buys property for another, the only permissible presumption, in the absence of a showing to the contrary, is that he holds it in trust until he is repaid his advance.³¹

One who alleges an express trust has the burden of proving it.³² So, where complainant seeks to establish an express trust in land, based on a parol agreement, the burden is on him to show that the agreement has been so far executed that a refusal of complete execution would operate as a fraud.³³

When there is evidence establishing an express trust, favorable presumptions arise,³⁴ such as that

Trust created by legislature

The courts should make every presumption of intent in favor of the manifest object of the legislature and against the failure of a beneficent trust created by a state appropriation.—Bissell v. Butterworth, 118 A. 50, 97 Conn. 605.

Purpose of creating spendthrift trust

In absence of any other purpose stated in instrument creating spendthrift trust, presumption exists that it was created for maintenance and support and, in some cases, education of beneficiaries.—In re De Lano's Estate, 145 P.2d 672, 62 Cal.App.2d 808.

a person executing a declaration of trust is of sound mind³⁵ and is familiar with the terms of the declaration³⁶ and that it is valid and binding according to its terms,³⁷ and the burden of proof is on the party disputing its validity or terms.³⁸ Thus, the burden of proof is on the maker of a declaration of trust who asserts that it was without consideration,³⁹ or was to be binding only on certain contingencies.⁴⁰ Where there is evidence that, except for occasional intervals, the grantor in a deed of trust was insane during a period of time including the execution of the deed, the burden is on the person asserting the trust to show that it was executed during a lucid interval.⁴¹

Termination of trust While a party asserting that a trust once existing has terminated or been extinguished usually has the burden of proof,⁴² a trust shown to have once existed will be presumed to have been extinguished after the lapse of forty years, and the death of all the original parties.⁴³

§ 67. — Deposits in Bank

One who alleges an express trust in his favor in a bank deposit has the burden of proving it, but the language of a deposit agreement may give rise to a presumption that a trust was created, and if it does, the burden of rebutting the presumption is on the person asserting a lack of intention to create a trust or attacking the transfer as illusory.

In accordance with the general rule stated supra § 66, one who alleges an express trust in his favor in a bank deposit has the burden of proving it.⁴⁴ Where the owner of a bank account transfers it to a new account opened in his name in trust for himself and another, joint owners, subject to the order of either, a rebuttable presumption of a trust in the account arises.⁴⁵ On the other hand, the mere language of a deposit document which makes no mention of a trust, but which provides that the account is thereafter to be a joint account in the names of the owner and another, subject to the order of either, and balance at death of either to the survivor does not raise the presumption that a trust was established,⁴⁶ but the burden is on the survivor to show the existence of such a trust,⁴⁷ and even if a presumption of a trust arose, it would be rebuttable.⁴⁸

If a person deposits his own money, in his own name, in trust for another, and dies before the beneficiary, without revocation or some decisive act or declaration of disavowance, a presumption arises that an absolute trust as to the balance remaining on deposit at the death of the depositor was created,⁴⁹ but it has been held in a number of cases

Word "revocation," in rule of text, connotes the termination of the trust relationship which has theretofore come into valid being.—In re Chris- that the foregoing presumption is rebuttable,⁵⁰ and a controverting demonstration may be made either to show that there was no initial intention to confer the claimed benefit, or that after the opening of the account with the requisite trust intent, the sentiments of the depositor changed.⁵¹ Thus, while it has been said that no presumption of a trust arises from the opening of an account in the depositor's name as trustee for another,⁵² where the language of a deposit agreement shows prima facie the creation of a trust in favor of a third person, the burden of showing want of intention to create a trust is on the depositor⁵³ or other person asserting such want of intention⁵⁴ or attacking the transfer as illusory,⁵⁵ fraudulent,⁵⁶ or unduly influenced;⁵⁷ and when such burden has been met, the burden is then on the alleged beneficiary to establish his right to the fund.⁵⁸

Where a decedent transferred funds originally owned by him to a bank account in the name of a third person in trust for the decedent, the burden is on the third person as trustee to prove, on the death of the decedent, that it was the intention to create a true Totten trust.⁵⁹

It has been held that there is no presumption that a trust in a savings bank deposit is irrevocable,⁶⁰ although there is some authority for the view that where the word "trustee" appears on a bankbook, indicating that it is a trust fund, there is raised the presumption that an irrevocable trust was intended.⁶¹

A statute providing that when a deposit is made in trust for another, and no further notice of the existence and terms of a valid trust shall have been given in writing to the bank, the deposit shall, on the death of the depositor, be paid to the person in trust for whom the deposit was made does not give rise to a conclusive presumption of the existence tie's Estate, 4 N.Y.S.2d 484, 167 Misc. 484.

Word "disaffirmance," within rule of text, signifies a repudiation of the fact that the supposed trustee holds the rem in question in a fiduciary capacity, and denies that any trust relationship is in existence.—In re Christie's Estate, supra.

Inference of fact

The so-called presumption that depositor intended that avails of savings account in trust form should become property of beneficiary on depositor's death was not a true presumption of law relating to survivorship rights resulting from opening of joint account in statutory survivorship form, but was a mere inference of fact.—In re Herle's Estate, 300 N.Y.S. 103, 165 Misc. 46.

Deposit to credit of self as "administrator"

Where executor deposited money to credit of himself as "administrator" of designated fiduciary estate, never exercised any act of individual ownership or control over fund, but allowed it to remain and accumulate interest for years, and died without attempting to dispose of funds, presumptively a trust existed in favor of person entitled to estate represented by deceased depositor, which residuary legatees of fiduciary estate could assert against executor of deceased depositor's will, after he had taken charge of deposit.—Reynolds v. of an intention to create an irrevocable trust,⁶² but merely lays down a rule of evidence,⁶³ and its purpose is to raise, as between the depositor and the putative cestui inter se, a rebuttable presumption of a trust from the form of the account.⁶⁴ It does not apply where notice of the terms of the trust was given to the bank.⁶⁵

Termination of trust. Where the opening of the account and declaration of trust have been proved, one asserting that the trust has been terminated has the burden of proving it.⁶⁶

§ 68. — Relation of Parties

The general rule that the burden is on one asserting a trust to establish the trust does not apply where the relation between the parties is of such nature as to show that they did not meet on equal terms, since a trust may be presumed in such case.

The general rule discussed supra § 66, that the burden is on one asserting a trust to establish the trust, does not apply where the relation between the parties is of such a nature as to show that they did not meet on equal terms.⁶⁷ The mere fact that a grantee of land was a nephew of the grantor is not sufficient, however, to show such a confidential relationship as to shift the burden of proof, and require the grantee to establish the nonexistence of a trust.⁶⁸ Where a wife transfers property to her husband without a valuable consideration, there is a presumption that the husband holds in trust for the wife, unless there is evidence establishing a gift,⁶⁹ and the burden is on the husband to show that the transfer was a gift and not a trust.⁷⁰ On the other hand, where the conveyance is from husband to wife, the presumption is that it is a gift, rather than a trust,⁷¹ and the husband has the burden of showing that a trust was created;⁷² but the presumption of a gift may be rebutted by evidence of facts showing that the husband's intention was to create a trust.⁷³

Fraud or undue influence. The mere fact that confidential relations exist between the grantor on a deed of trust and one of the trustees contingently interested in the subject of the trust after the termination of the trust, on the death of the grantor, does not raise a presumption that undue influence was exercised to procure the execution of the deed,⁷⁴ especially where such deed has long been recognized, acquiesced in, and reaffirmed.⁷⁵ So it has been held that a trust executed by a wife naming her husband as trustee for the benefit of the wife and others is presumptively valid,⁷⁶ and that

Revocability of trust

(1) The plain intent of statute is that when a donor opens a savings account in his name in trust for a named beneficiary, and there is no evidence as to donor's intent, donor's intent shall be taken to create an immediately effective trust for beneficiary, over which donor reserves a power of revocation, as evidence of which he retains passbook, and that as much of funds over which the donor has failed to exercise power of revocation shall belong to beneficiary at donor's death free from any claim of donor's legal representatives—Hickey v. Kahl, 19 A.2d 33, 129 N.J. Eq. 233.

(2) The death of the donor does not complete the trust but renders it irrevocable—Hickey v. Kahl, supra.

Transaction viewed with disfavor

Equity courts look with disfavor on transactions divesting a person of his entire estate, such as deeds conveying husband's home to his wife, with respect to husband's suit to have title declared held in trust for him—Selser v. Jester, 23 A.2d 602, 131 N.J. Eq. 57.

the burden of proving invalidity for fraud, duress, or coercion is on the wife.⁷⁷ The burden of proving that a bank account opened by a parent in trust for himself and his child was procured by the child by undue influence is on a third person who asserts it.⁷⁸ On the other hand, the existence of a confidential or fiduciary relation may, under some circumstances, raise a presumption of undue influence, which will cast the burden of showing the want of undue influence on the party seeking to establish a trust.⁷⁹ The fact that a grantor and a grantee in a deed are brothers, although insufficient in itself to show a confidential relation,⁸⁰ may, together with other facts, cast on the grantee, in a deed made by his brother without consideration, the burden of showing that the transaction was fair and equitable.⁸¹ So it has been held that, where a woman of advanced years executes to her son-in-law, who had for many years been her confidential adviser, and to her son a trust deed by which they are to be benefited, the burden is on them to show that she voluntarily made it, understanding that it gave her

§ 69. Admissibility

Evidence of the acts and declarations, either oral or written, of the parties and the surrounding circumstances may be admitted to show the existence or non-existence of a trust and to establish its nature, purpose, and terms, or the beneficiary therein, but incompetent or irrelevant evidence is inadmissible.

Subject to the limitations imposed by the statute of frauds and the general rules as to the competency of evidence, an express trust may be proved not only by express declarations, but also by circumstances from which its existence may be inferred,⁸³ and to this end evidence of all the facts and circumstances surrounding the parties at the time of the making of a contract, which are necessary to be known to understand their conduct and motives or to weigh the reasonableness of their contentions, is ordinarily relevant and admissible.⁸⁴ So evidence of the acts and declarations, either oral or written, of the parties, as well as the surrounding circumstances, may be admitted to show the existence⁸⁵

The manifestation to create a trust inter vivos at some future time regarding property not then owned by the declarant, considered in connection with purchase of such property immediately thereafter, and declarant's failure personally to claim the property as his own, are facts from which court may infer intention to create a trust at time the property was purchased.—McClendon v. Deed subject to outstanding liens

Where wife and husband held title to realty for the wife and her two brothers, and conveyed to one of brothers when husband was about to be drafted, trust was not thereby destroyed, and circumstantial or other evidence could be given, in action against the brother's widow to establish trust, to show that brother had taken title as trustee, though the conveyance to him had contained warranty clause which excepted two liens and had also contained provision that brother took subject to outstanding liens—Powe v. Powe, Tex. Civ.App., 268 S.W.2d 558, error refused no reversible error.

even though he retained possession and absolute control thereof.⁹⁶ So declarations of one who deposits money in a bank under circumstances raising the presumption of a trust are incompetent, if made after the deposit, to show that the depositor did not intend to create a trust.⁹⁷ The cestui que trust cannot introduce his own declarations to establish the trust,⁹⁸ but, unless disqualified on some other ground, he can testify to the facts, like any other witness,⁹⁹ even though such testimony is self-serving.¹

Revocation of trust. Declarations of the creator of a trust made after the trust has been fully created are inadmissible to show a revocation, where no power of revocation has been reserved by him.² On the other hand, it has been held that a depositor's declarations are admissible to show a revocation of a tentative trust in a bank account.³

Where an agreement purporting or relied on to create a trust is reduced to writing, parol evidence is not admissible to vary, add to, or contradict the written instrument if such instrument is complete and free from ambiguity, but parol evidence of the circumstances surrounding the execution of the agreement may be received where such evidence does not vary or contradict the instrument.

Rule held inapplicable

Extraneous evidence was not inadmissible to prove a trust in life policies or their proceeds for benefit of estate of insured's creditor and insured's condorsers on notes, because policies naming creditor's executors as beneficiaries designated them as trustees, on ground that parol proof will not be permitted in contradiction of trust declared in writing, where no trust was declared in face of policies, and it was creditor's will, not the policies, which made beneficiaries executors and trustees.—Dunn v. explain the position of the parties,¹⁰ and show the consideration of the agreement.¹¹ Moreover, the parol evidence rule does not apply where the exclusion of such evidence would result in fraud,¹² or where it is sought to show that the consideration named in a deed did not pass;¹³ and since, as shown supra § 35, a trust in personality may be created by parol, parol evidence is admissible to supply the purpose of such a trust which is not stated in the instrument declaring it.¹⁴ Furthermore, where one advanced the purchase price for land taken in the name of another who subsequently declared that he held the title in trust for third persons, such declaration is not conclusive on the one who advanced the purchase price and who was not a party to it.¹⁵ After parol evidence has been introduced without objection, it may be considered as proof of an express trust.¹⁶ Where a written instrument purports only to divest the transferor of title to property and vest it in the transferee, and contains no recital that the transferee was to hold the property for his own benefit and does not mention a trust or beneficial interest, the parol evidence rule does not preclude oral proof to show that the purportedly absolute transfer was in fact a transfer of the legal title only subject to an oral trust,¹⁷ and, whenever parol evidence is received to prove a trust under a deed absolute on its face, the same kind of evidence is admissible to defeat it.¹⁸ The purpose and intent of a parol trust may be shown by parol evidence.¹⁹ Where there has been part performance of an express parol trust, evidence of the parol trust is proper and competent.²⁰

Showing recognition or performance of trust.

Since, as discussed supra § 37, a trust in land is taken out of the statute of frauds by the trustee's acknowledgment or execution thereof, parol evidence is admissible to show that an express trust had once existed,²¹ or that it had been acknowledged by the trustee²² or carried into effect.²³

§ 71. Weight and Sufficiency

According to some, but not all, authorities, something more than a mere preponderance of evidence is necessary to establish a parol trust in land; and in order

Circumstances under which declaration executed

In suit to quiet title, where, as part and parcel of the original transaction, declaration of trust in writing was executed six days after trustee received deed to realty, oral testimony was admissible to establish circumstances under which written declaration of trust was executed.—*Sagendorph v. Intent of depositor

(1) Where deposit is made in bank entitled, "A, in trust for B," with no further expression in writing of depositor's intent, oral testimony is admissible to prove depositor's intent, as well as to prove an intention contrary to claim of a trust relation.—Katz v. Greeninger, 215 P.2d 121, 96 Cal.App.2d 245.

(2) So when there is no formal written declaration of trust and an account is opened in a bank in the name of the owner and depositor under the mere title of "trustee" or in the name of the depositor and one other person, "trustee, payable to either or survivor," other evidence may be resorted to in order to ascertain whether the owner intended to cre-

to establish a trust either in land or personalty the evidence must be clear, convincing, and satisfactory, but the proof need not be uncontradicted.

While it has been held in some cases that the existence of a parol trust in land must be established by a preponderance of the evidence,²⁴ and that a preponderance of the evidence is sufficient for this purpose²⁵ if it clearly and definitely attests the facts which give rise to the trust asserted,²⁶ it is generally held that something more than a mere preponderance of the evidence is required,²⁷ or at least that a superior measure of proof is necessary.²⁸

It has been held that in order to establish a trust by parol, the evidence must be so clear and convincing as to lead to but one conclusion,⁵⁴ and some of the cases go to the extent of requiring that the evidence be so clear and convincing as to show the existence of a trust beyond a doubt,⁵⁵ or a reasonable doubt;⁵⁶ but other cases hold that it is not necessary that it should be established with certainty⁵⁷ or beyond a reasonable doubt,⁵⁸ although nothing should be left to conjecture.⁵⁹

The requirement that the evidence be clear and satisfactory, clear and convincing, etc., applies not only to proof of the existence of the trust, but also to the establishment of its terms and conditions,⁶⁰ and is especially applicable where the trust is attempted to be proved by parol evidence where such evidence is admissible for that purpose,⁶¹ or where it is sought to convert into a trustee a person holding the legal title to property ostensibly as absolute

Trust in personality

(1) Parol evidence, in order to establish trust of personality, must be very clear and satisfactory and find some support in surrounding circumstances and in subsequent conduct of the parties—Harmon v. Harmon, 6 N.W.2d 762, 303 Mich. 513—Boyer v. Backus, 276 N.W. 564, 232 Mich. 593, motion denied 280 N.W. 756, 282 Mich. 701, certiorari denied 59 S.Ct. 147, 305 U.S. 644, 83 L.Ed. 416, rehearing denied 59 S.Ct. 248, 305 U.S. 674, 83 L.Ed. 437.

(2) A high degree of proof is necessary.—Zolntakis v. Orfanos, C.C.A. Utah, 119 F.2d 571, certiorari denied Orfanos v. Zolntakis, 62 S.Ct. 62, 314 U.S. 630, 86 L.Ed. 506.

(3) Evidence could not be made basis of finding that a parol trust in personality existed unless it could be said that evidence was unequivocally demonstrative of a trust and supported only conclusion that a trust was created—Van Seiver v. Rothensies, D.C.Pa., 36 F.Supp. 577, affirmed, C.C.A. 122 F.2d 697.

(4) Facts of case must be examined in light of general trust principles.—Economy v. Roberts, 265 N.W. 441, 274 Mich. 484.

Oral trusts in realty

(1) Oral trusts in realty are not favored and must be strictly proved by evidence which is direct, positive, express, unambiguous, and convincing.—In re Brenneman's Estate, 63 A.2d 59, 360 Pa. 558—Moffit v. Moffit, 194 A 2d 418, 340 Pa. 107—65 C.J. p 326 note 50 [a], [b].

(2) Evidence of parol agreement creating such trust is closely scrutinized and carefully weighed by the courts.—Moore v. Terry, 170 S.W.2d 29, 293 Ky. 727.

(3) In determining whether a trust in land was established, it was not essential that defendant establish that defendant and plaintiff's husband jointly earned money to pay for land—Cluck v. Sheets, 171 S.W.2d 860, 141 Tex. 219.

Casual remark

In suit between brothers for an accounting and to enforce alleged casual remark by de-

admissions may be considered and given weight, they should be received with great caution.⁶⁷ Where it is sought to prove a parol trust in land, in a jurisdiction where such trusts are not forbidden, a mere oral declaration by the grantee is insufficient, unless corroborating circumstances are shown.⁶⁸ The mere fact that the word "trustee" appears in a stock certificate after the name of the holder is not evidence of ownership of another,⁶⁹ and the mere fact that bonds had been registered in a person's name under the designation of "trustee" does not conclusively show that a trust had been created.⁷⁰ Where the trustee admits that he held title to land in trust, clear and satisfactory evidence is essential as against the beneficiary, to prove that the trust has terminated.⁷¹ Circumstances patently inconsistent with the existence of a trust will refute separate evidence clearly indicating the existence of a trust.⁷² The interest of the witnesses may be considered in determining whether or not the testimony is clear, satisfactory, and convincing.⁷³

Number of witnesses. The testimony of one witness may be sufficient to establish an express trust,⁷⁴ and, hence, such testimony need not be corroborated;⁷⁵ but it has been held that the testimony of one witness without other corroborating circumstance should not be held sufficient to prove an express trust.⁷⁶

Application of rules. The rules above stated have been applied in numerous cases. In some of them the evidence has been held sufficient to establish an express trust,⁷⁷ to prove the nature and purposes fendant that money in a bank in defendant's name belonged to brother constituted the weakest evidence and under circumstances disclosed was of no decisive importance.—Hacker v. Hacker, 283 N.W. 639, 287 Mich. 435.

Mere possession of bankbook

Where savings bank account was opened by depositor in trust for grandson but depositor and grandson were living in the same house from time of issuance of bankbook to date of depositor's death, possession of the bankbook by grandson was not by itself evidence of any probative value in determining validity and effect of trust.—In re Weinstein's Estate, 28 N.Y.S.2d 137, 176 Misc 592.

Persuasive evidence to contrary

Fact that alleged donor-settlor clipped interest coupons from bonds and used proceeds, although not fatal to validity of alleged gift of bonds in trust, is strongly persuasive that alleged donor-settlor did not intend present gift of bonds with trust attached.—Elliott v. Gordon, C.C.A. Kan., 70 F.2d 9.

Acceptance

Evidence held to show that creditor accepted trust created for his benefit—Fidelity Trust Co. v. Union Nat. Bank of Pittsburgh, 169 A. 209, 313 Pa. 467, certiorari denied Union Nat. Bank of Pittsburgh v. Fidelity Trust Co., 54 S.Ct. 530, 291 U.S. 680, 78 L.Ed. 1068.

Delivery of savings bankbook to person in whose name deposit was made by another as trustee, was some evidence that trust had been of the trust, and its terms and conditions,⁷⁸ to charge a grantee or assignee as trustee of an express trust,⁷⁹ to make prima facie case,⁸⁰ to rebut presumptions,⁸¹ or to support a finding that a trust did not exist.⁸²

Intent not to relinquish title or possession

Trustor's continued use and alienation of and complete dominion over property after execution of trust indenture constituted persuasive evidence of intent not to relinquish title to or possession of property until death.—Atlantic Nat. Bank of Jacksonville, Fla. v. St. Louis Union Trust Co., 211 S.W.2d 2, 357 Mo. 770.

Form of account was not sole evidence as to purpose of deposit.—In re Cohen's Will, 90 N.Y.S.2d 776.

Corroborative testimony

The oral statements of decedent that money deposited in bank in his name as trustee for son belonged to son did not create any trust for son, but explained and corroborated aim of account as one to preserve to son rights to which decedent regarded him as being entitled when deposits were originally made in form evidenced by passbooks on such accounts.—In re Cohen's Will, supra.

fact that interest at a fixed rate is stipulated to be paid on a deposit is prima facie, but not necessarily conclusive, evidence that the relationship of debtor and creditor, and not of trustee and cestui que trust, was created.⁹⁶

§ 72. In General

The validity of a trust is to be determined as of the time it is created, and depends not merely on the terms on which it is created, but on its effect and the purpose of its creation, and the courts will not declare a lawful trust unreasonable and unjust.

The validity of a trust is to be determined as of the time it is created,⁹⁷ and depends not merely on ant's money and wife claimed ownership of deposit, a declaration of trust signed by defendant when bank account was opened stating that deposit was one of defendant's money was not conclusive proof of ownership of money deposited thereunder, especially where defendant testified that money belonged to wife.—*Moschetti v. Malefactions by trustee

Once an intention to create a mortgage loan trust was expressed and acted on by bank which was both settlor and trustee, subsequent irregularities constituted malefactions by the bank as trustee and did not constitute evidence militating against the existence of the trust.—*State ex rel. Attempted disposition after creation of valid trust

Where an instrument is a trust in its inception, the time it is in existence or the varying amount of dominion exercised by the trustee does not affect its legal import.—*Harris v. the terms in which it is created, but on its effect and the purpose of its creation.⁹⁸ The courts deem it no part of their duty to declare a lawful trust unreasonable and unjust.⁹⁹ A trust is not invalid because it is executed without consulting the beneficiaries,¹ because it imposes the consent of the beneficiary as a condition to the sale and transfer of the trust property,² because it permits the trustee to resign and surrender the trust at any time,³ because the trustee is authorized to make advances out of the principal to the beneficiaries,⁴ because it fails to provide when the trust should terminate,⁵ because based wholly on a contingency which may never arise,⁶ because drafted by a person not authorized to practice law,⁷ or because it may result in tax evasion.⁸ It is no objection to the validity of a trust that the trustee named may not or cannot properly execute the duties imposed,⁹ since there is a possibility in all trusts of the trustee proving recreant,¹⁰ and equity will provide a proper remedy not only where there is a vacancy in the office of trustee, as discussed infra § 217, but also where the trustee negligently or dishonestly performs his duties, infra § 233.

A provision that the trustee may apply such portion of the trust fund to his personal use as he may find necessary does not abolish the trust.¹¹ If an instrument contains all the essential elements of a trust, the mere fact that the settlor may have desired thereby to avoid a compliance with a statute pertaining to the execution of wills, or to avoid the necessity of probate administration, will not void the trust.¹² The fact that the courts are to a certain extent ousted by a will of jurisdiction over a trust does not invalidate the trust as long as public policy is not violated.¹³ A provision that the trustee shall not be obliged to submit himself to the jurisdiction of the court in the ordinary affairs of the trust does not invalidate it.¹⁴ Where an agreement to hold stock violated an escrow provision against assignment, the trust is invalid, although all elements of a trust are present.¹⁵

although the provisions of the trust are identical with his previous declarations of intent.¹⁷ Mental incompetency, which will defeat the trust, exists where a person is incapable of understanding and acting with discretion in the ordinary affairs of life,¹⁸ or is incapable of understanding, in a reasonable manner, the nature and effect of the trust.¹⁹ Strictly speaking, the question presented in such a case is not necessarily whether the settlor was generally of sound mind, but whether he had sufficient mental capacity to understand the trust which he executed.²⁰ Debilitating illness or bodily infirmities²¹ and advancing years²² will not of themselves deprive the settlor of requisite mental capacity, nor will the testator necessarily be deemed incompetent by reason of a delusion,²³ or mere eccentricities or peculiarities of behavior.²⁴ However, a trust which is the consequence of an insane delusion cannot stand,²⁵ and the fact that the settlor acted voluntarily does not necessarily mean that he was capable of making a valid trust.²⁶

mental coercion which destroys the free agency of the creator of the trust and constrains him to do that which is against his will, and what he would not have done if left to his own judgment and volition.³³ The act must be one to the injury of the creator or to the injury of some one on whom he would, if left to his own free will, have bestowed a benefit.³⁴ The influence of the creator's friends and relatives, exercised for the benefit and advantage of the creator, is not undue.³⁵ The fact that a settlor consented to the creation of a trust because of her husband's illness and the effect of a refusal does not constitute undue influence.³⁶ While insistence on one's legal rights may not be undue influence, obtaining a deed of trust where there is no claim to the property cannot be justified as the exercise of a legal right.³⁷

b. Confidential Relationship

The mere fact that a confidential relationship exists between the grantor and the grantee does not alone invalidate a trust, but where the person in whom confidence is reposed exerts his influence to procure an advantage at the expense of the grantor, the trust may be deemed invalid.

In accordance with rules considered in Deeds § 63, the mere fact that a confidential relationship exists between the grantor and the grantee does not alone invalidate a trust,³⁸ especially where it appears that the grantor had competent and independent advice of an attorney,³⁹ or the trust was not procured through improper means attended with circumstances of oppression or overreaching,⁴⁰ and this rule applies even though the relationship of conservator, guardian, or administrator exists between the grantor and the trustee.⁴¹ Where, however, the person in whom confidence is reposed exerts his influence to procure an advantage at the expense of the grantor, the trust may be deemed invalid⁴² and may be set aside, as discussed infra § 85. Whether such close and confidential relationships exist between the parties as to enable one to dominate and control the other is ordinarily a question of fact dependent on the circumstances of each case.⁴³ The existence of a confidential or fiduciary relationship may, under some circumstances, raise a presumption of undue influence, which will cast the burden of showing the want of undue influence on the party seeking to establish the trust, as discussed supra § 68. However, where the grantee secures no undue benefit from the grant,⁴⁴ the mere fact of the relation of attorney and client,⁴⁵ broker and client,⁴⁶ principal and agent,⁴⁷ parent and child,⁴⁸

Surrender of advantage

Lawyer who drafted trust agreements making himself trustee was duty bound to make clear to settlor, beyond possibility of misunderstanding, fact that he was placing trust corpus in hands of unbounded individual with exceptionally wide powers and discretion with respect to its investment and safe keeping and that, as trustee, he was to receive extraordinarily large compensation for his services; and having failed to do so, equity would require that he be compelled to give up advantage gained by such transaction, without inquiry as to whether the advantage was fair or unfair.—Lederman v. Lisinsky, 112 N.Y.S.2d 203.

Invalidity should clearly appear before the courts are warranted in nullifying the expressed will of a trustor and an inference of illegality or invalidity should not be drawn where a legitimate purpose is just as apparent.—Jenkins v. First Nat. Bank, C.C.A.Tex., 107 F.2d 764.

Violation of Servicemen's Readjustment Act

Oral trust agreement between veteran and mother to purchase house for mother with mother's money in name of veteran in order to procure for mother benefits of G.I. Bill of Rights, though she was not entitled to such benefits, was illegal and void because a fraud on the Servicemen's Readjustment Act, even though veteran lived in the house.—Perkins v. Hilton, 107 N.E.2d 822, 329 Mass. 291.

Violation of War Risk Insurance Act

A trust of insurance proceeds for the benefit of persons not within the class prescribed by the War Risk Insurance Act and in violation thereof, has been held illegal.—Vince v. Kelly, 195 N.Y.S. 57, 118 Misc. 591.

Holding property for aliens

Trust agreement, whereby citizen was to hold property for aliens and to reconvey on naturalization of one of alien owners and deed whereunder property was conveyed to citizen, was valid enforceable trust as against contention that it was illegal agreement to defraud state of opportunity to declare forfeiture of alien's property.—Vinhos v. Andrews, 1 N.E.2d 59, 362 Ill. 593

Contract not illegal

Where storekeeper received chattels from owner under a bill of sale, absolute on its face, in order to secure a loan from a bank, but with parol understanding that after loan was repaid property was to belong to owner, and bank was fully protected because it took security without any knowledge of parol trust and in reliance on storekeeper's false statement that conveyance was absolute agreement, bill of sale was in no sense an illegal contract, nor was it rendered illegal simply because in carrying it out illegal acts were committed, and trust agreement was not invalidated because of illegal agreement.—Jrmingier v. Daniel, Tex. Civ. App., 185 S.W.2d 148, refused for want of merit.

Manifest immorality

Trust provisions must be manifestly intended to bring about that which is, in morals, bad, before they will be declared void as against public policy, and such inference will not be drawn when legitimate purpose is just as apparent.—Jenkins v. First Nat.

a. In General

An express trust created in violation of fundamental principles of equity is a nullity and an express trust cannot be created to effect a purpose which is illegal, contrary to public policy, or in contravention of the law and the judgments of the courts.

The right to create an express trust is subordinate to the fundamental principles of equity, and an express trust created in violation of such principles is a nullity.⁵² An express trust cannot be created to effect a purpose which is illegal,⁵³ contrary to public policy,⁵⁴ or in contravention of the law and the judgments of the courts.⁵⁵ A trust is invalid when the object is the suppression of a criminal

Bank, D.C.Tex., 26 F.Supp. 812, affirmed, C.C.A., 107 F.2d 764.

Type of trust

There is no valid distinction between testamentary trust and trusts inter vivos as far as questions of public policy are concerned.—Shannon v. Irving Trust Co., 9 N.E.2d 792, 275 N.Y. 95.

Provisions held not against public policy

(1) If the terms of a trust it may be provided that trustee shall vote as directed by settlor, or by a beneficiary, or by a third person; and where deeds of trust conveying shares of stock in family corporation were designed to continue family control and management of corporation, a provision in each deed of trust that trustee should deliver proxy to president or vice president of corporation was valid, and was not invalid on the ground that it provided for a perpetual proxy.—Edson v. Norristown-Penn Trust Co., 59 A.2d 82, 359 Pa. 386.

(2) An agreement assented to by all stockholders to transfer their stock in corporation to the corporation in trust to be transferred on the death of a stockholder to his son or some other person qualified to fill vacancy would not be opposed to public policy as restraint on owner's right of alienation.—Oakland Seavenger Co. v. Gandi, 124 P.2d 143, 51 Cal.App.2d 69.

(3) A parol agreement, whereby one of cotenants agreed that if other cotenants would permit land to be bid off to his agent at mortgage foreclosure sale he would advance money to pay it and would then sell land and divide proceeds equally among cotenants, was not invalid as against public policy.—Embler v. Embler, 32 S.E.2d 619, 224 N.C. 811.

prosecution.⁵⁶ On the other hand, a trust created for the purpose of evading the collateral inheritance tax has been held valid.⁵⁷ The creation of a partnership and trust in the same instrument is not contrary to law.⁵⁸ A trust in which the beneficiaries are described as the grantor's wife and children by him begotten does not show on its face that the consideration was illicit relations, so as to render it void.⁵⁹

b. Conditions or Restrictions

Conditions or restrictions attached to the enjoyment of a trust estate which are unlawful or opposed to public policy are void, and a condition that the beneficiary be reared in a certain faith has been held void as has a provision violative of the parent's right to care and custody.

Conditions or restrictions attached to the enjoyment of a trust estate which are unlawful or opposed to public policy are void.⁶⁰ So, a condition that the beneficiary of a trust be reared in a certain faith is void,⁶¹ as is a provision violative of the parent's right to care and custody.⁶² However, a provision forbidding the use of any portion of the income from a trust estate, created for the benefit of the settlor's son, for the support of the son's wife and child is not invalid as against public policy.⁶³

Conditions affecting marital relation. In accordance with the rules discussed in Contracts §§ 233-237, governing the validity of agreements affecting marital relations, while a condition in a trust instrument is void which induces a separation or divorce,⁶⁴ or which is in restraint of marriage,⁶⁵ where the scheme of the trust does not tend to restrain marriage,⁶⁶ or to induce a separation or divorce,⁶⁷ the condition is valid. A grant of property to a husband in trust for the wife's separate use is not invalid by reason of a clause that should the husband and wife separate or divorce the husband would pay over the principal.⁶⁸

§ 79. Partial Invalidity

The invalidity of some of the objects or provisions of a trust, or of part of several trusts created by the same instrument, will not affect the validity of remaining objects, provisions, or trusts which are separate and independent; but the rule is otherwise where the valid and invalid parts are so intertwined that one is not enforceable, according to the intent of the creator of the trust, without the other.

It is well settled that the invalidity of some of the objects or provisions of a trust, or of part of several trusts created by the same instrument, will not affect the validity of remaining objects, provisions, or trusts which are separate and independent but

Rights of mother

Provision that settlor's son should be cared for by settlor's mother, was invalid under evidence that custody of minor son had been awarded to his mother in divorce suit, that probate court had accepted bond of minor's mother as guardian, and that she had taken proper care of minor—Wade v. Wade, supra.

Clear violation essential

The tendency in a trust to disrupt relationship of parent and child may not be found as basis for invalidating the trust, when it is not clearly apparent; and trust created for benefit of grandson after son had been taken from father because of father's alleged unfitness was not manifestly intended to separate father and son and hence void as against public policy because of provision that income should not be paid to grandson while living with father, notwithstanding father was subsequently pronounced fit to have custody of son, where relationship in fact was not disrupted.—Jenkins v. First Nat. Bank, D.C. Tex., 25 F.Supp. 312, affirmed, C.C.A., 107 F.2d 764.

Provision expressing desire that designated person obtain custody of a child, but providing that in any event trustees should maintain and educate child, was not void as violating rights of child's parents—Malone v. Herndon, 168 P.2d 272, 197 Okl. 26.

in such case the invalid portions will be rejected and the valid portions permitted to stand.⁶⁹ So, a life estate in trust, good in itself, is not destroyed by the invalidity of the remainder over.⁷⁰ The rule is otherwise where the trust instrument itself so provides,⁷¹ or where the valid and invalid parts are so blended and intertwined in one scheme that one is not enforceable, according to the intent of the creator of the trust, without the other.⁷² Closely allied to the rule of severability is the doctrine of modifying clauses which permits a gift in trust to be valid in spite of the imposition of an invalid qualification thereof, if the gift and the qualification are verbally separable.⁷³ Essentially, it is a rule of construction employed to effectuate, insofar as possible, the intention of the trustor.⁷⁴

The intention of the grantor at the time of the execution of a trust deed governs in the determination of whether each grant in the trust deed is separate and consequently sever-

able in case one of them is invalid—Bateson v. Bateson, 293 N.W. 795, 291 Mich. 426.

Evaluation of occurrences

It is permissible and proper to examine and evaluate actual occurrences in determining whether a case is a proper one for application of rule which permits a severance of invalid trust provisions in order to sustain those which are valid—In re Gump's Estate, 107 P.2d 17, 16 Cal 2d 525.

Generally, trust provisions for a valid term are separable from those for an invalid period where trust instrument shows trustor would have preferred separation to total invalidation or where invalid provisions only incidentally affect main scheme—In re Gump's Estate, supra.

Invalidity of power to vote trust stock held not to invalidate other provisions of trust agreement—Lloyd v. McDiarmid, 19 N.E.2d 292, 60 Ohio App. 7.

Uncertainty

General allegation that trust is void in toto for uncertainty cannot be sustained if trust provisions are good in any respect, or to any extent—Fuller v. Hedgcock, 80 S.E.2d 18, 239 N.C. 370.

Invalidity as against some persons or rights

(1) The fact that provisions of trust agreement are ineffective to protect trust income from claims of settlor's creditors does not invalidate trust as whole or destroy remainder interests created by such agreement—Greenwich Trust Co. v. Tyson, 27 A.2d 166, 129 Conn. 211.

(2) So, the mere fact that a trust was void as to widow's rights did not necessarily make it void as to the rights of other beneficiaries—Wanamaker v. Kappel, 218 S.W.2d 618, 358 Mo. 1077.

Qualification eliminated without destroying main intent

Trust indenture requiring payment of income to settlor during life and providing for termination of trust at his death and conveyance of trust estate to his issue per stirpes created valid remainder interests in settlor's issue, and under "modifying clauses doctrine" such interests were not invalidated by further invalid provision for retention in trust of remainder interest of any minor beneficiary during minority, since such invalid qualification was verbally separable from prior absolute gift and could be eliminated without destroying main intent of settlor—Otto v. Union Nat. Bank of Pasadena, supra.

§ 80. What Law Governs

While it is clear that the validity of trusts of realty must be determined by the law of the situs of the realty, in the case of trusts of personalty no invariable rule as to what law governs can be formulated for all cases involving varying facts, and in determining the question numerous elements or factors may be considered, such as the intention of the settlor, his domicile, the domicile of the trustee, the location of the trust property, whether the trust is testamentary or inter vivos, and whether the property is tangible or intangible, but the authorities are not in complete accord, and some have given dominance to one element or combination of elements and some to another.

Questions concerning the validity of a trust must be determined in accordance with the laws of the state whose law is applicable thereto.⁷⁵ The fact that a trust is presumptively invalid under the law of the forum will not prevent enforcement of the trust, if valid under the governing law and not contrary to the prohibitory law of the forum.⁷⁶ Since, as discussed in Conflict of Laws § 19, the law of the situs of immovable property controls and governs its acquisition, disposition, and devolution, the validity of a trust of real estate must be determined by the law of its situs.⁷⁷

Trust of real and personal property

(1) The validity of trust involving real and personal property situated in foreign country has been held to be governed by the laws of that country.—In re Smith's Mill, 67 N.Y.S.2d 330.

"Much confusion has existed concerning the law that controls the validity . . . of inter vivos trusts of intangible personal property where the domicile of the settlor is in one state and place of administration is in another"—Shannon v. Irving

Personal property. The determination of what law governs the validity of trusts of personal property is not free from difficulty.⁷⁸ In the absence of a controlling statutory provision,⁷⁹ no invariable rule can be formulated for all cases involving varying facts, at least in the case of inter vivos trusts of intangible personal property.⁸⁰ In determining the question numerous elements or factors may be considered,⁸¹ such as the intention of the settlor, his domicile, the domicile of the trustee, the location of the trust property, the place in which the business of the trust is carried on, whether the trust is testamentary or inter vivos,⁸² and whether the property involved is tangible or intangible.⁸³ The authorities are not in complete accord, and some have given dominance to one element or combination of elements and some to another,⁸⁴ although it seems to be a generally recognized rule that where a preponderant number of the elements are grouped in one state the group prevails over any single element, and especially so where the intention of the settlor is included in the larger group.⁸⁵ Some authorities apparently regard the intention of the

(1) The law of the state wherein settlor and beneficiary resided and where trust was made has been held to govern the validity of the trust.—Hutchinson v. Hutchinson, 119 P.2d 214, 48 Cal.App.2d 12.

(2) So the law of the state where the instrument was executed, where the settlor and trustee resided, and where the trust estate was delivered

settlor as controlling,⁸⁶ especially in the case of inter vivos trusts,⁸⁷ and have held or declared that the validity of the trust should be determined according to the law chosen by the settlor,⁸⁸ or according to his intention⁸⁹ if there is a real connection between the selected jurisdiction and the transaction,⁹⁰ or the trust res is delivered to the trustee in the selected jurisdiction and there administered,⁹¹ unless to do so is contrary to the public policy of the state in which a determination is sought.⁹² The intent of the settlor when not directly expressed in the trust instrument is to be gathered from all the facts and circumstances,⁹³ including the settlor's domicile, the domicile of the trustee, the location of the trust res, and the delivery thereof to the trustee under the terms of the trust.⁹⁴ Although it has been stated that the domicile of the settlor is no longer the absolute and controlling consideration,⁹⁵ other authorities have held or declared that the domicile of the settlor is generally the controlling factor,⁹⁶ especially in the case of testamentary trusts,⁹⁷ and not the domicile of the beneficiary.⁹⁸ Still other authorities have held that the law of the place where the transaction takes place determines the validity of an inter vivos trust of personality,⁹⁹ or of a trust of choses in action created

(3) Trust of bank account held governed by law of state where agreement executed, where bank account located, and trustee domiciled—Boyle v. Kempkin, 9 N.W.2d 589, 243 Wis. 86.

(4) The situs of a trust created by a deed inter vivos is in the jurisdiction where the deed of trust was executed and where the settlor was then domiciled, where the trust res was then located, where it was to be administered by a corporation organized under the laws of that jurisdiction, and where the donee of a power of appointment over the trust res then resided—In re Barton's Estate, 49 Pa.Dist. & Co. 273.

Additional deposits in another state

Where from all the facts and circumstances attending the creation of a trust it is apparent that the settlor intended the law of a particular state to govern the determination of the validity of the trust, the circumstance that additional deposits of trust funds were made with the trustee in another state would not be taken as manifesting an intent that the validity of the trust with respect to such additional deposits should be governed by the law of the state where the deposits were made.—Wilmington Trust Co. v. Law of state where trust made held to govern

U.S.—Fricke v. Weber, C.C.A. Ohio, 145 F.2d 737—Mayfield v. First Nat. Bank of Chattanooga, Tenn., C.C.A. Tenn., 137 F.2d 1013.

by a settlement or other transaction inter vivos.¹ It has also been held that the validity of a trust of personal property must be determined by the law of the state where the property is situated and the parties intend that it should be administered;² and in this connection it has been held that the validity of a trust of documents which in the market place are treated as property is determinable, like tangible chattels, by the law of the state wherein the documents are situated,³ but that this rule does not apply to choses in action or intangible property not embodied or merged in a mercantile document and documents which are merely evidence of property.⁴ A trust offending the public policy of the state in which it is to be administered cannot be established, regardless of the settlor's residence.⁵ On the other hand, where a trust is to be administered in a state other than that of the domicile of the settlor, and is valid where it is to be administered, it will be held valid by the courts of the domiciliary state even though invalid under the domiciliary law.⁶ With respect to trusts of money deposited in a bank, as discussed supra § 54, it has been held that the law of the state in which a tentative trust is created and is to be performed governs, notwithstanding the depositor is domiciled in another state when the trust is created and at the time of his death,⁷ and the beneficiary is domiciled in the same state as the depositor.⁸

The law in effect at the time of the creation of the trust governs its validity,⁹ and for this purpose a trust is regarded as created when the cestui becomes entitled to its benefits.¹⁰

§ 81. Right to Contest Validity

In general, the validity of a trust may be questioned only by one who will be entitled to some interest in the property in case the trust is declared invalid, and then only when he is not estopped, or barred by the terms of the trust instrument, but the court may sua sponte, as a matter of public policy, be required to determine the validity of the trust.

Where spouses in consideration of divorce, entered into an agreement for creation of a trust for the benefit of plaintiff, their minor son and corpus of trust was placed in hands of trustee, who was willing to execute the trust, neither father nor mother, both being in pari delicto, could assail validity of trust, hence trustee held trust for plaintiff's benefit—*Thompson v. Consequently, strangers to the trust have no right to attack it,¹⁴ unless their position as creditors gives them such right.¹⁵ Where a person waives his claim to part of an estate consisting of a trust, he has no standing to attack the validity of the trust.¹⁶ However, the court may sua sponte, as a matter of public policy, be required to determine the validity of the trust,¹⁷ and in such case the standing of a party to challenge the validity of the trust is immaterial.¹⁸

Statute of Frauds. In accordance with the general rules discussed in Frauds, Statute of, § 220, the right to invoke the statute of frauds is a personal privilege not available to strangers to the trust.¹⁹ The statute does not prevent a trustee from carrying out a parol trust, but merely makes it voidable at his option,²⁰ and when the trustee has by his conduct ratified and affirmed the trust and induced others to change their position because of it, the doctrine of equitable estoppel, as discussed infra § 83, comes into play. No one except the trustee or persons succeeding to his interest may take advantage of a failure to comply with the statute.²¹ If the trustee chooses not to avoid the trust, it has been held that his judgment creditor has no standing to complain,²² nor has the trustee's trustee in bankruptcy.²³

§ 82. Ratification of Defective or Invalid Trust

An invalid trust may, in some cases, be validated by ratification.

An invalid trust may, in some cases, be validated by ratification.²⁴ When a trust is invalid when its creation is attempted, but subsequently the impediment to its validity is removed, a good and valid trust may be created by a subsequent ratification of the terms of the invalid trust.²⁵ A settlor may not contend that a trust instrument was executed by mistake where he subsequently ratifies the trust,²⁶ and a trust agreement induced by undue influence can be ratified by the settlor on his restoration to freedom of action.²⁷ However, there can be no effective ratification of a trust agreement procured by false representations while the person whose ratification is claimed remains in ignorance of their falsity.²⁸

§ 83. Estoppel or Waiver as to Defects or Objections

While the parties may not by consent validate a trust which is by law invalid, a person may on general principles of estoppel be precluded from asserting the invalidity of a trust.

While the parties may not by consent validate a trust which is by law invalid,²⁹ a person may on general principles of estoppel be precluded from asserting the invalidity of a trust.³⁰ So, the creator of a trust and those claiming through him may, under some circumstances, be estopped to question the validity of the trust.³¹ It is generally indispensable to the application of the doctrine of equitable estoppel that the person claimed to be estopped shall have full knowledge of the facts at the time when the conduct relied on as the basis of the estoppel takes place.³² In accordance with the general rule, as discussed in Estoppel § 150, that an estoppel in pais operates on a right or title which is voidable, and not on one which is void, the doctrine of estoppel cannot operate to make valid a trust instrument void from its very inception.³³

Where a purported trust is ineffective because it is testamentary in vesting an interest only on the grantor's death, as discussed supra § 29, the beneficiaries obtain no rights under a trust by way of estoppel because the trustee proceeds to carry out the trust.³⁴ The requirement of a writing to prove a trust under the statute of frauds, as discussed supra §§ 31-41, is not waived where parol evidence is objected to, although the objection is imperfectly expressed.³⁵

Estoppel of trustee. Except where a trustee has been deceived,³⁶ by accepting the trust and undertaking to perform part or all of the duties devolving on him, he is estopped to deny the validity of the trust.³⁷ Since, as discussed supra § 81, the statute of frauds does not prevent a trustee from carrying out a parol trust, but merely makes it voidable at his option, when the trustee has by his conduct ratified and affirmed the trust and induced others to change their position because of it, the doctrine of equitable estoppel comes into play and the trustee cannot deny the validity of the trust on the ground that it violates the statute of frauds.³⁸ However, the estoppel should be limited to saving harmless, or making whole, the person in whose favor it arises, and should not be an instrument of gain or profit.³⁹ The fact that a person considers himself a trustee does not foreclose him from

claiming that he is not when in fact no trust exists.⁴⁰

Estoppel of beneficiaries. Under general rules, beneficiaries are prohibited from claiming under the trust and at the same time asserting that it is invalid.⁴¹ Where a person receives his share of an estate and acknowledges it as in full of all his interest, he may not attack the validity of a trust in favor of others created by the same grantor.⁴² Where, however, a beneficiary under a trust deed is given an illegal preference as a creditor, another beneficiary may attack such preference and still claim under the trust deed.⁴³

A settlement agreement compromising litigation involving the validity of a trust, if meeting the essential requirements of a valid settlement, as discussed in Compromise and Settlement §§ 2-15, is binding on the parties thereto,⁴⁴ and a decree approving such agreement is res judicata⁴⁵ and not subject to collateral attack.⁴⁶

Where a conveyance in trust is invalid or ineffectual for any reason, legal title will be deemed to have remained in the settlor, and if a trust agreement is obtained by fraud, no one can obtain a vested or contingent interest in the property.

Where a conveyance in trust is invalid or ineffectual for any reason, legal title will be deemed to have remained in the settlor,⁴⁷ especially where it appears that settlor did not intend that the beneficiaries should have title immediately.⁴⁸ If a trust agreement is obtained by fraud, no one can obtain a vested or contingent interest in the property.⁴⁹ However, where a trust is adjudged void, the trustee's payments of income to the beneficiary are not recoverable by the settlor where such payments are acquiesced in by him.⁵⁰ It has been held that if the trust is invalid it cannot be held to create a valid power in trust.⁵¹

contents.—Barnum v. Fay, 69 N.E.2d 470, 320 Mass. 177.

Del.—Du Pont v. Du Pont, 164 A. 238, 19 Del.Ch. 131.

Circumstances showing mistake

(1) Improvidence, lack of independent advice, and absence of a power of revocation are circumstances from which, if the case is strong enough, the court may infer mistake.—Fidelity Union Trust Co. v. Parfner, 37 A.2d 675, 135 N.J.Eq. 135.

(2) Voluntary trust created without power of revocation may be set aside if involving mistake. Instrument creating voluntary trust was grounds of undue influence,⁶⁰ duress,⁶¹ or breach of duty in a confidential relationship,⁶² where it is not the pure, voluntary, well understood act of the grantor's mind;⁶³ or where cancellation would be to the best interest of all concerned by preventing an irreparable loss.⁶⁴

The court will not set aside a trust on the ground of mistake where the settlor has, subsequent to its creation, ratified the trust by his conduct.⁶⁵ The person creating a trust for a fraudulent purpose, or his heirs or devisees, will not be relieved by setting aside the conveyance and restoring the property,⁶⁶ but equity will leave the parties to such transactions in the position in which they have placed themselves, refusing all affirmative aid to either of the fraudulent participants.⁶⁷

Lack of independent advice. The lack of independent advice is a circumstance to be considered, but it will not of itself call for annulment of a trust;⁶⁸ so, improvidence in the creation of a trust and want of independent advice are not alone sufficient to set aside a donative trust.⁶⁹ Where the trust entered into voluntarily is for the benefit of the settlor and his children without any benefit accruing to the trustee, failure to obtain independent legal advice is no ground for cancellation.⁷⁰ The fact that the settlor of a trust executed it without legal advice as to its effect is not a ground for cancellation in the absence of a showing that he tried to obtain legal advice and was prevented from doing so.⁷¹ On the other hand, an inter vivos trust executed by an aged and inexperienced woman has been set aside on the ground that she did not have adequate independent advice.⁷²

Nonperformance. Equity ordinarily will not set aside a trust for nonperformance by the trustee,⁷³ especially where the trust has been to a considerable extent performed.⁷⁴ A remedy exists by way of removal of the trustee, as discussed infra § 233.

Confidential relations. A trust instrument invalid by reason of undue influence resulting from a confidential relation between the parties, as discussed held to show intent that trust be irrevocable; hence, failure to reserve power of revocation was not evidence of mistake.—Du Pont v. Du Pont, 164 A. 238, 19 Del.Ch. 131.

(3) Omission of power of revocation as affecting validity generally see infra § 90.

Trustee as trustor's attorney

Where irrevocable trust instrument transferring stock to trustee was sought to be set aside on ground that it was result of mutual mistake, or mistake on trustor's part and knowledge on trustee's part, and there was no charge of undue influence, fact that trustee was trustor's attorney and that trustor had implicit confidence in him was immaterial.—Bokewell v. Clemens, 190 S.W.2d 912, 354 Mo. 686.

Beneficiaries as donees

In suit for rescission because of mistake and partial failure of consideration, as against contention that beneficiaries would suffer by rescission, beneficiaries are mere donees with no greater rights than the original parties to the trust instrument.—*Farrell v. Improvidence as factor was a factor to be considered in suit to set aside the indenture on ground of undue influence, in determining whether settlor signed indenture voluntarily with full knowledge of its contents.—Barnum v. Fay, 69 N.E.2d 470, 320 Mass. 177.

supra § 76, may be set aside.⁷⁵ Where the grantee sustains the burden of showing that the trust is the free and voluntary act of the settlor and beneficial to him, the trust will not be set aside.⁷⁶

Omission of power of revocation. The absence in a trust instrument of the power of revocation does not in itself render the trust invalid as discussed infra § 90, so as to warrant the court in setting it aside.⁷⁷ On the other hand, the omission of this power may make the trust so unreasonable and improvident in a particular case as to justify the court in setting it aside.⁷⁸

Trust void on its face. An alleged trust which is wholly void has been held absolutely inoperative, so that there is no necessity for setting it aside.⁷⁹

Oral trust. Where an alleged trust is oral, no formal conveyance by the cestui que trust is necessary to cancel or set aside the trust.⁸⁰

b. Proceedings and Relief

Proceedings for the cancellation, or setting aside, of a trust instrument, and the relief awarded, are in accordance with the general rules governing proceedings for the cancellation of instruments.

A court cannot be deprived of jurisdiction of an action by a grantor's guardian to cancel the trust on the ground of the grantor's mental incompetency by a trust provision that the rights reserved to the grantor are personal and not subject to be exercised by any court under any process of law for his benefit or for the benefit of his creditors.⁸¹

Time for suit; laches. A complainant may be barred of the right to the cancellation of a trust because of laches.⁸² Where a trust for the lives of the settlors is good, a suit to determine the validity of limitations following the life interests of the settlors' living children is premature and should be dismissed.⁸³

Persons entitled; parties. A person who has no interest in the subject matter of the suit is not entitled to the cancellation of a trust instrument;⁸⁴ and a trustee has been held not entitled to an annulment of the instrument.⁸⁵ One to whom a testator's heirs transfer their interest in his estate can maintain a suit to set aside trusts created by him.⁸⁶

All living persons beneficially interested should be made parties in a suit to set aside an instrument of trust.⁸⁷ In a suit to set aside a trust, the beneficiaries of the trust are necessary parties where the suit is brought by the settlor⁸⁸ or by one of the Trustees entitled to remainder

Action by trust income beneficiaries to avoid trust agreements entitling defendant trustees to remainder after plaintiffs' deaths will not be dismissed as to trustees individually, since their rights as remaindermen are necessarily involved and they must account as individuals for their actions as trustees after last accounting by them.—Brundige v. Bradley, 51 N.Y.S.2d 830, affirmed 51 N.Y.S.2d 636, 268 App.Div. 952, reversed on other grounds 62 N.E.2d 385, 294 N.Y. 345.

Potential distributees

In action to revoke for fraud trust of life estates with remainder to settlor's issue and in default to issue of settlor's sister, joining potential distributees, in addition to presumptive distributees, was unnecessary.—O'Leary v. Grant, 278 N.Y.S. 839, 155 Misc. 98.

Guardians of unborn beneficiaries

In action to revoke for fraud trust involving life estates and remainder to issue of settlor or her sister, representation by special guardians of unborn beneficiaries was unnecessary, where there were no issues between beneficiaries.⁸⁹ Where it appears at the trial that a complete determination of the controversy may not be had without the presence of other parties, the court may have full power, under statute, to direct them to be brought in.⁹⁰ Where a beneficiary has an interest adverse to complainant, he should be made a defendant rather than joined as a complainant.⁹¹ Trustees claimed to be liable both individually and as trustees should be sued in both capacities;⁹² it is not enough that they are sued individually.⁹³

Pleading. In a suit to set aside a trust, complainant must state in his petition sufficient grounds entitling him to relief.⁹⁴ If fraud is the ground of relief, it must be distinctly and positively alleged.⁹⁵ Where plaintiff applies for leave to amend his complaint so as to plead fraud on the part of defendant, defendant has no standing to oppose the application on the grounds that inconsistent causes of action are pleaded and that necessary parties are

Evidence. The burden of proof is on the party alleging one or all of the grounds of cancellation to prove them or some of them.⁹⁸ When a prima facie case for cancellation is made, the burden is then on the party procuring the execution of the trust to show that the execution was voluntary.⁹⁹ Where a fiduciary or confidential relationship exists between the grantor and grantee, the burden is on the grantee to prove that the trust was the free, voluntary act of the grantor;¹ if the trustee planned to gain an advantage over the settlor, the burden is on the trustee to show that the transaction was fair.²

Rules applicable to the admissibility of evidence generally, and, in particular, those governing in suits for the cancellation of instruments generally, control in suits to set aside a trust instrument.³

Parent and child.

Where conveyances to grantor's son were made in trust for the benefit of the grantor, the fact that a confidential relationship of parent and child existed between grantor and grantee did not raise presumption of undue influence so as to cast upon trustee the burden of negating the existence of such influence, since grantee did not benefit unduly from the transfers.—Reiss v. St. Louis Union Trust Co., Mo., 148 S.W.2d 250.

(2) In suit by settlor against his attorney and others to set aside trust on ground that he was induced by fraud and undue influence to execute indenture, evidence that assets of trust were shares of stock in banks from which attorney received compensation as a director, that attorney refused to consent to revocation of trust, and concerning other conduct of parties subsequent to execution of indenture, was competent on issue whether execution was induced by fraud, undue influence, or breach of fiduciary relationship, but after judge properly found that there

7. Evidence held sufficient to establish that trustee acted in good faith and used no deception when deed of

settlor misunderstood the provisions of the trust.⁸ The confidential relationship existing between parent and child requires the trial judge to weigh the evidence with the utmost scrutiny in order to determine, in accordance with equity and fair dealing, whether a parent was unduly influenced by a child in executing trust instruments.⁹

Delay on the part of the trustor in seeking to set aside the trust on the ground of misunderstanding is strong evidence that the trust was executed with full knowledge of its provisions.¹⁰ Where a settlor in a prior suit for divorce and an allowance of alimony in defense set up by way of affidavit that he put his property in trust, such affidavit conclusively shows that he executed the trust voluntarily.¹¹ A trust giving the income of the property for life to the trustor and the corpus on her death to her husband and children should not be annulled except on clear proof of the trustor's misunderstanding of its nature,¹² especially where, since its execution, the trustor has dissipated substantially all the rest of her fortune.¹³

Trial; findings. Whether a trustee planned to gain an advantage over the settlor of the trust is a question for the trial court.¹⁴ In an action to set aside a declaration of trust, reference in the preamble to the findings to alleged fraud included the alleged willful nondisclosure of material facts by plaintiff's confidential adviser.¹⁵ In such action, a finding that plaintiff intended to create irrevocable trusts amounts to a finding that, at the time of executing the trusts, he understood them to be irrevocable.¹⁶

Judgment; decree. In a suit to set aside a trust deed, the judgment must be supported by the findings,¹⁷ and, in a proper case, the decree may direct a reconveyance of the trust property.¹⁸ A decree of annulment does not relate back to the execution of the deed when the deed was not void, but simply voidable.¹⁹ Where the trustee acts in good faith, in pursuance of a will creating a trust, he will be protected, although the trust is subsequently declared void.²⁰

Costs; fees; expenses. In a suit to set aside a trust in equity, the disposal of costs is within the sound discretion of the court²¹ which, as discussed in Appeal and Error § 1636, will not be reviewed in the absence of abuse. A beneficiary, in such a suit, has been held not entitled to an allowance for attorney's fees;²² but the trustee has been held entitled to an allowance for reasonable attorney's fees²³ and necessary expenses²⁴ incurred in defending the validity of the trust. In an action for cancellation of a deed of trust as forged, the grantee is not entitled to be reimbursed for expenditures made by him for work and repairs on the property and payments of taxes and mortgage interest, where the alleged payments were made with full knowledge of plaintiff's attack on the validity of the grantee's title to any interest in the property.²⁵

§ 86. Reformation

On a proper showing, a trust instrument may be reformed so as to conform to the intention of the parties.

a court of equity will correct and reform a deed of trust or other trust instrument so as to conform to the intention of the parties.²⁷ Equity will not, however, perfect a declaration of trust left imperfect by the settlor.²⁸

Unexpected increase in value of trust assets has been held not to justify the reformation of trust instruments.²⁹

Effect of settlor's or donor's death. A voluntary deed of trust which, through mistake, fails to express the intention of the settlor, may be reformed even after the settlor's death, even though reformation benefits one beneficiary and harms another, provided all the conditions for reformation exist and the settlor did not confirm the grant in the form in which it was executed;³⁰ and in an action by one or more beneficiaries under a trust agreement against the others, the agreement may be reformed in equity after the death of the donor, where the mistake in the agreement is conclusively established.³¹ However, after a donor's death, a court cannot, as between beneficiaries, reform the definite language of a trust agreement on the theory that the donor's intended plan of distribution was defeated by a mistake in computation.³² A beneficiary under a voluntary settlement who, after the settlor's death, seeks reformation on the ground of mistake, can have no greater right to rectification than the settlor could have had.³³

Laches; delay. The reformation of trust instruments may be barred by laches,³⁴ but mere delay which prejudices no one does not constitute ground for refusal of reformation.³⁵

Persons entitled; parties. The beneficiaries may have reformation,³⁶ but a trustee holding merely the legal title without any beneficial interest may not sue for reformation of the trust.³⁷ A donee of a trust cannot assert a cause of action for reformation of the trust for undue influence, where he claims no contractual rights with respect to the donor;³⁸ and a donee of a voluntary trust cannot assert a cause of action for reformation for mistake, where he is

Irrevocable deed; knowledge of mistake

A court of equity has jurisdiction and power to reform an irrevocable deed of trust on petition of the settlor in order to correct a mistake, and where the creation was gratuitous it is immaterial that neither the trustee nor the beneficiaries knew of or shared in the mistake.—Flagg v. Flagg, 80 Pa Dist. & Co. 544, 44 Berks Co. 101.

Reversion of principal to settlor

Court may reform nunc pro tunc a voluntary but irrevocable trust deed so as to conform with settlor's intention at time he created trust, to so provide for disposing of principal that it could not revert to settlor on the happening of any possible contingency, provided chancellor finds that failure to so provide in original deed was a mistake or inadvertence and such finding is approved by the court in banc.—*Irish v. Evidence. When mistake is urged as a ground for the reformation of a trust instrument, it must be established by clear, convincing, and satisfactory evidence.⁴¹

Relief awarded; decree. Equity may afford relief by a decree that the deed be canceled, and a new one executed by a master appointed for that purpose.⁴² A settlor may have a trust instrument reformed so as to include a power of revocation, which he intended to include but which was omitted by mistake;⁴³ but if by mistake the settlor omits to insert in the trust instrument a provision reserving a power of revocation, the court may, without a preliminary decree of reformation, give effect to the transaction as if it had been reformed, by decreeing that the trustee retransfer the trust property to the settlor.⁴⁴

- b. Power of court as to modification generally
- c. Reservation or grant of power
- d. By parties generally
- e. By trustee
- f. Proceedings for modification

a. In General

The same principles apply to modification of a trust as to its revocation. A modification of an inter vivos deed of trust must be plain and unequivocal.

The same principles have been said to be applicable to the modification of a trust as are applicable to its revocation.⁴⁵ Any modification of an inter vivos deed of trust must be in plain and unequivocal language.⁴⁶ After modification of a trust in accordance with a reservation of power to modify or alter it, the validity of the trust with respect to the rule against perpetuities is to be tested as of the time of the modification.⁴⁷ A trust agreement which is not indefinite or ambiguous is not subject to clarification by supplementary agreement between one of the trust settlers and the trustee.⁴⁸ The granting clause of a deed in which the grantee is described as a trustee may be required to be modified by reference to a will, where such reference is made an inseparable part of the granting clause.⁴⁹

Impairment of trust. A trust cannot be impaired for any purpose other than the purpose of the trust.⁵⁰

Addition or withdrawal of property. A settlor has the inherent power to add property to his trust with or without a reservation of such right.⁵¹ Under a provision by which the settlor reserves the right to withdraw, on written and duly recorded request, one-half of the personal estate of the trust estate, with all accessions or additions thereto, the settlor has been held entitled to withdraw at least one-half the value of the original trust property as of the time of its receipt by the trustee and of the actual additions made to the trust by the settlor, exclusive of realized gains.⁵² The recording of

Trust under seal. Verbal arrangements with trustees under an agreement cannot be used to modify the terms of a trust instrument which is under seal;⁵⁴ and the effect of a statute may be such that a trust under seal cannot be modified by an unsealed instrument.⁵⁵

Trust of stock; voting trust. Where voting trust agreements are allegedly executed as part of the terms of an agreement creating a trust in stock, it cannot be held as a matter of law that the provisions of the voting trust agreements modify or alter the stock trust agreement.⁵⁶

b. Power of Court as to Modification Generally

Under most authorities, a court possessing equitable powers may modify the terms of a trust to preserve it and carry out the trustor's intent. Such power must be exercised cautiously and only where necessary.

It has been held that even a court of equity cannot go beyond the express terms, provisions, and directions of a valid trust;⁵⁷ that such court cannot alter the terms of an instrument creating a trust,⁵⁸ and that it cannot interfere with a trust solemnly created and established by an order of court.⁵⁹ On the other hand, it has been held that a court of equity has power, in exceptional cases, to modify the terms of a trust;⁶⁰ that such a court has power, inherent in the jurisdiction which it exercises over trusts generally,⁶¹ to modify the terms under certain conditions,⁶² as when necessity or expediency impels;⁶³ and that a court of equity may modify a trust on a proper showing of changed conditions occurring after the creation of the trust, if the rights of all the beneficiaries may be protected.⁶⁴

Protecting rights of infants and unborn remaindermen

Where the rights of infants or unborn remaindermen, who are only constructively before the court, are to be affected, the court should see to it that their rights are not injuriously affected; it is the duty of the court to preserve, and not to allow the parties in interest to alter trusts, where they have been made and created according to law.—Bettis v. Anticipation of, or encroachment on, corpus

Anticipation of corpus, or encroachment on corpus, of estate in advance of time of distribution fixed by trust instrument, is permitted in cases of extreme emergency, as where the needs of infant, and sometimes of adult, beneficiary are involved, but the doctrine is strictly limited to present use of property to which beneficiary is ultimately entitled.—In re Cosgrave's Will, 31 N.W.2d 20, 225 Minn. 443, 1 A.L.R.2d 175.

Unforeseen conditions

The rule must be based on facts showing that conditions have arisen or exigencies developed, which could not have been foreseen by donor, and that as result the beneficiaries will suffer loss.—Dyer v. Paddock, 70 N.E.2d 49, 395 Ill. 288.

Allowing invasion of corpus of trust by life beneficiaries without consent of residuary beneficiaries, or any attempt to protect their interests was error as taking property from one without his consent and giving it to another.—In re Van Deusen's Estate, 182 P.2d 565, 30 Cal.2d 285.

Sympathy for needs of particular beneficiaries of trust does not empower court to deprive other beneficiaries of their interests in corpus of trust without their consent or enable court to construe non-testamentary declarations of testatrix into an expression of her plan or purpose in providing for trust.—In re Van Deusen's Estate, supra.

Payment of taxes

(1) Chancery court has inherent power to modify trust agreement so as to permit payment of federal income taxes out of trust funds after unforeseen enactment of statute imposing on donor personal liability for such taxes, where donor is unable to pay because of changed financial circumstances.—Hardy v. Bankers

So, independently of the cy pres doctrine,⁶⁵ a court of equity has the power to modify the terms of a trust in order substantially to carry out the intention,⁶⁶ or to effectuate the primary purpose,⁶⁷ of the creator of the trust.

The court has power to do whatever is necessary to preserve a trust from destruction,⁶⁸ including the power to modify and change the terms of the trust, in order to preserve it,⁶⁹ in appropriate⁷⁰ or unusual⁷¹ circumstances. So, also, a court of equity, in order to accomplish the fundamental purpose of a trust, may, to a certain extent and under certain circumstances, break in on the terms of the trust⁷² and authorize a disposition of the trust property not

Care of cemetery lots; misallocation

Where testatrix has created trust fund for care of cemetery lots, and excessive amount thereof is result of miscalculations by her, equity has power to grant relief by diversion of portion of fund to her heirs at law; but amount of approximately two thousand seven hundred dollars for such care was not so excessive, under the circumstances, as to offend public policy and warrant court in interfering therewith by directing a diversion of excess over five hundred dollars to heirs at law who had been limited by will to bequests of one

Benefits to be conferred on beneficiaries

When it appears that the benefits which the trustor desires to confer on the beneficiaries would not accrue to them by a slavish adherence to the terms of the trust, the court may modify the terms to accomplish the real intent and purpose of the trustor.—Adams v. Cook, 101 P.2d 484, 15 Cal 2d 352.

Rule or statute as to contracts inapplicable

The rule against courts modifying terms of a contract does not apply to declaration of trust where primary purpose of trust would not be accomplished by a strict adherence to terms of declaration, and rule that, where primary purpose of trust would not be accomplished by strict adherence to terms of declaration of trust, the court may modify the terms to accomplish intent of trustors, is not contrary to canons of construction of contracts contained in Civil Code.—Adams v. specifically authorized by the instrument creating the trust.⁷³

In exercising its jurisdiction to modify or alter, the court should have due regard for the intention of the settlor,⁷⁴ and should be exceedingly cautious;⁷⁵ courts are slow to exercise such power,⁷⁶ and will do so only when it clearly appears to be necessary,⁷⁷ and only in extreme cases.⁷⁸ The power of the court is exercised not to defeat or destroy the trust, but to preserve it or the estate,⁷⁹ and not to defeat, but to carry out, the purpose of the donor or trustor.⁸⁰ The exercise of the power can be justified only by some exigency or emergency which makes the action of the court in a sense indispensable to the preservation of the trust,⁸¹

Where conditions not foreseen by trustor will defeat his purpose unless a deviation is permitted, a court of equity has jurisdiction to grant the necessary authority to deviate, and such equitable jurisdiction may be invoked not only where necessary to preserve the estate but also where literal compliance with the trust instrument has become impossible.—Holles v. and the condition or emergency asserted must be one not contemplated by the trustor and which, had it been anticipated, would undoubtedly have been provided for.⁸² Further, the exigency, contingency, or emergency necessary to invite the intervention of the courts must relate to, and grow out of, the trust itself or directly affect the corpus thereof or the income therefrom.⁸³ In such cases the court may, as far as may be, occupy the place of the settlor and do with the trust fund what the settlor would have done had he anticipated the emergency.⁸⁴ Where a contingency arises, such that the estate may be totally lost to the beneficiaries, equity will not permit such loss for lack of power to modify the trust;⁸⁵ it is sufficient that the estate may be totally lost, or in grave danger of loss, for equity to aid in its preservation.⁸⁶

Borrowing and investing; insurance trust

A court of equity, with the consent of the settlor and the beneficiaries, would change a voluntary life insurance trust agreement so as to increase the discretionary powers of the trustee as to borrowing on the policies to pay premiums and as to investments, where changed financial condition made the modifications in the administrative features of the trust agreement necessary in order to preserve the trust corpus for the beneficiaries.—*Cutler v. Technical objections

Court of equity will not modify, or permit modification of, trust on technical objections merely because its terms are objectionable to interested persons or their welfare would

The trust will not be modified, in violation of the settlor's intention, merely because the interest of the parties will be served by doing so,⁸⁷ or because the beneficiaries dislike its provisions,⁸⁸ or merely for the purpose of enabling them to receive a greater income,⁸⁹ or to use the property in what they may regard as a more profitable manner than that contemplated in the instrument;⁹⁰ and rights in a trust estate cannot be altered to prevent disappointment which the creator might have provided against had he foreseen the mishap.⁹¹ However, it has been held that modification may be made in order to secure for the cestuis the maximum benefit.⁹²

Settlement; family differences. Settlement of a suit brought to have the trust agreement vacated has been held a proper occasion for the modification of the terms of the trust by the court, where be served thereby.—Carter v. Kempton, 62 S.E.2d 713, 233 N.C. 1.—Rodwin v. Clodfelter, 38 F.2d 203, 226 N.C. 366.—Rice v. Wachovia Bank & Trust Co., 59 S.E.2d 803, 232 N.C. 222.

Purchase of home

(1) Modification to permit purchase of home by beneficiary, by giving him part of corpus of trust, was held not authorized in absence of showing of such necessitous circumstances as would warrant disregarding plain provisions of trust.—*Moxley v. necessary to preserve the trust.⁹³ A court of equity is not justified in altering a trust to preserve the spiritual values of family affection.⁹⁴ So, the court will not alter a trust by approving a family settlement where the conditions about which the parties complain are created by family differences only incidentally affecting the trust,⁹⁵ and where the questions raised can be settled by the courts without resort to a modification of the trust.⁹⁶ Also, the court will not approve of modification by way of a family settlement to the possible detriment of infants.⁹⁷

Statutes. Under a statute providing for the compromise, settlement, or adjustment of any trust controversy, an equity court has been held to have the power to modify a trust with or without the consent of the trustee.⁹⁸ A statute authorizing certain deviations from the terms of a trust because of a change of circumstances has been held not to change substantive rights, but to deal only with the administration of trusts,⁹⁹ and hence is not invalid as retrospective.¹ The test, under such a statute, has been held to be whether the results of the provisions of a trust are so interfered with, and the gifts so diminished, by an unanticipated change of circumstances, that it is equitable to permit a deviation from the terms of the trust.²

c. Reservation or Grant of Power

- (1) In general
- (2) Construction and operation of provision

(1) In General

The creator of a trust may reserve power to modify it; modification under such reservation, in order to be effective, must be in the mode prescribed.

A settlor creating a trust may reserve the power of modification thereof.³ Such a reservation does not invalidate the trust,⁴ or make the disposition

Exercise for grantee's benefit improper

Where son of trustor had power to alter or amend trust in any way, and to any extent, he might deem desirable and his powers were limited to such changes as, in his judgment, would further the interest of the trust estate, powers so given could not be exercised for his benefit, since to use them in such a way as to benefit himself would be breach of trust and a violation of the governing laws of the state.—Allen v. Will

(1) A will was held not modification of inter vivos deed of trust not making a testamentary disposition of property.—In re Lyon's Estate, 63 A.2d 415, 161 Pa.Super. 140.

(2) A trust indenture providing that the reserved power of modification shall be exercised by filing with the trustee a written notice of modification manifests the settlor's intent that the power shall be exercised only during his lifetime, so as to foreclose its exercise by will; and where a settlor retains the testamentary power to modify the trust in-

it may not be amended in part;⁹ and where the method prescribed is by instrument prior to the settlor's death with the joinder of all the trustees, the affixation of a trustee's signature to the amending instrument after the settlor's death is insufficient.¹⁰ A power to modify a trust "by an instrument in writing" may not be exercised by an oral agreement.¹¹ The settlor's intention as to the mode of exercising the power is to be drawn from a consideration of the entire instrument.¹² Where no method of exercise of the power reserved is specified, alteration powers may be exercised in any manner sufficiently manifesting an intention to alter.¹³

A reservation of the power to revoke has been held to include a reservation of the power to amend, the latter power being implicit in the former,¹⁴ provided those who have the power to revoke and those who are entitled to the corpus on revocation consent to the amendment.¹⁵

Relinquishment of power. The reserved power to amend or modify may be relinquished by subsequent action on the part of those in whom it vests.¹⁶

(2) Construction and Operation of Provision

A trust provision reserving the right of modification is to be construed in the light of the surrounding circumstances, and so as to make it effective. The right may be repeatedly exercised, in the absence of language to the contrary.

A provision reserving the power to modify the trust is not to be construed in vacuo, as an isolated grammatical phenomenon,¹⁷ but is to be read in its context¹⁸ and in the light of the circumstances surrounding the use of the words.¹⁹ A construction which would render the provision surplusage denture, a general residuary clause in his will, disposing of all the residue of his property or all the property for which he has a power of appointment, is not an exercise of the power of modification.—Chase Nat. Bank of City of New York v. Tomagno, 14 N.Y.S.2d 759, 172 Misc.63

Acknowledgment; authentication

(1) The requirement of acknowledgment of any amendment is not wholly for the benefit of the trustees, and cannot be waived by them, where such requirement is included, only acknowledged amendments are valid, and no others; requirement of acknowledgment means that settlor is required to acknowledge the instrument making the alteration before a public officer authorized by law to take acknowledgments of other writings.—Phelps v. State Street Trust Co., 115 N.E.2d 382, 330 Mass. 511.

(2) The fact that amendments were acknowledged outside the state and were not authenticated by the foreign county clerks, would not make them void, where the settlor had required no formal authentication, but only that the amendment be written, acknowledged, and filed with the trustee.—In re Woodward's Trust, 132 N.Y.S.2d 266, 284 App.Div. 459, appeal denied 132 N.Y.S.2d 924, 284 App.Div. 838.

Where settlor expressly reserved right to change provisions effective during her life, but waived right to revoke or amend provisions effective at her death, subsequently amended trust declaration to require trustees to make payments to her on demand, and demanded approximately one-half of corpus, she was entitled to amount demanded, even though such payments might result in reduction of amount for distribution upon her death, and trustees would be required to pay amount demanded and hold rest on previous terms.—Chase v. Switzer, Mass., 118 N.E.2d 749.

U. S., D.C. Mass.*, 69 F.Supp. 946, reversed on other grounds, C.C.A., 164 F.2d 404.

What settlor actually did by way of amendment at a subsequent time was not evidence of power he had reserved to himself, but was some evidence of his intention at time of creation of trust containing reserved power to amend it.—Theopold v. U. S., D.C. Mass., 69 F.Supp. 946, reversed on other grounds, C.C.A., 164 F.2d 404.

Exclusion of children or grandchildren

should be rejected if any other course is rationally possible.²⁰

A particular provision of this nature has been held to authorize only slight or trivial changes in the trust instrument;²¹ but it has also been held that, in the absence of anything in the text of the instrument to indicate that the word "amend," as used in such a provision, is to have an unusually restricted meaning, the word is not to be strictly construed so as to refer only to minor changes in the operation or management of the trust,²² and is not to be so construed as to forbid any amendment which would materially vary the respective property interests of the beneficiaries.²³ Where a trustor reserves the right to make certain changes or "such other changes as may in my opinion be for the best interest of my beneficiaries," the phrase "such other changes" must refer to changes similar to the changes provided for in the trust declaration;²⁴ and such a provision has been held not to give the trustor power to use the income from the trust estates for his own use.²⁵ Where a trust instrument contains no special provisions covering the investment and other administrative handling of accumulated income, such income is subject to the power reserved by the settlor to amend the general administrative provisions of the trust instrument.²⁶ Under a trust agreement for the payment of income to the creator of the trust during his lifetime and on his death to others, an amendment by naming the creator's wife as remainderman does not, per se, have the effect of revesting title in the creator to any part of the principal.²⁷ The reservation by a settlor, in addition to an interest for life, of power to alter or amend the trust, or to withdraw principal from it, with or without the consent of the trustee, does not make incomplete a gift over to the statutory next of kin.²⁸

Frequency of amendment. Where the settlor of a deed of trust expressly reserves the right to modify or amend it, the right to amend may be repeatedly exercised if there is no language in the trust expressly or by necessary implication restricting the right to one exercise thereof.²⁹ So, where the settlor reserves the power to modify the trust indenture "from time to time," as he may see fit, such power is not exhausted by its exercise five times.³⁰ As used in a trust instrument providing for amendment of the trust by unanimous action of the settlor's family "at any time," the quoted phrase does not necessarily mean at any one time,³¹ but should be interpreted as equivalent to "from time to time,"³² where a construction limiting the amendment power to a single amendment would seem to fall far short of accomplishing the settlor's purpose.³³

Amending instrument. Modification or alteration, under a reservation of power, may take the form of a supplemental trust indenture, complete in itself and intended as a substitute for the original, so that the only rights arising are those created under the supplemental indenture.³⁴ However, a supple

Effect of language in settlor's reservation

The use of words "at any time," in settlor's reservation to himself of power to amend if "at any time" during his life there should be a failure of issue of either of the children, did not indicate that general power of amendment immediately following, providing that trust might be amended "at any time," was to be exercised but once.—State Street Trust Co. v. Crocker, supra.

mental agreement, executed in accordance with the terms of the original, may be such that particular provisions of the original are not affected by the supplemental agreement.³⁵ Where a trust instrument provides that the trustor can, at any time, supplement the instrument, the mere loss or destruction of one copy of an amendment cannot amount to a revocation of the amendment to the trust,³⁶ and the fact that the donor, in several amendments, lists the dates of several prior amendments does not have the effect of reviving the amendments mentioned and revoking those not mentioned.³⁷

Power as overriding termination provisions
Where a trust agreement embodies the substance of a proposal appearing in a plan of reorganization, and it is uncertain whether the parties to the agreement intended that the power to amend shall override the termination provisions of the agreement, the reorganization plan can be considered in order to ascertain the intent of the parties,³⁸ although the plan preceded the agreement and the trustees were not parties thereto.³⁹

Conversion of single trust into separate trusts.
Under a reservation of power to alter a trust, the grantor and beneficiaries have been held empowered to convert a single trust into separate trusts for each beneficiary.⁴⁰ Particular instruments amending the deed of trust to this effect have been held not open to the objection that the subject of the trusts was not adequately defined;⁴¹ and the fact that the trusts are kept in one fund does not necessarily defeat the intention of the parties and require the conclusion that there is but a single trust.⁴²

Amount or proportion received. If a settlor who reserves the right to change or modify the amount or proportion to be received by any beneficiary can only reduce the amount of a share to a nominal or negligible amount, a beneficiary whose share is completely abolished cannot obtain relief in a court of equity;⁴³ so, in effect, a reservation of the right to modify the amount or proportion each beneficiary is to receive includes the power to modify it so that one beneficiary receives no part of the trust estate.⁴⁴

Failure to exercise power. Where there is never even an attempt to exercise a reserved power to alter or modify a trust, there is no impairment of rights in remainder.⁴⁵

d. By Parties Generally

Authorities differ as to whether the parties may modify a trust. A settlor not reserving the right to modify generally cannot do so without the beneficiaries' consent.

It has been broadly held that the law grants no power to the parties to alter the terms of a trust.⁴⁶ Under other authority, a trust agreement may be modified by consent of all the parties in interest;⁴⁷

Reason for rule

An undivided interest in property may constitute the corpus of a trust, and there may be several trusts where there is but one corpus.—MacManus v. C. I. R., CCA.6, 131 F.2d 670.

Effect of trustee's treatment of corpus

Once an estate is created, no subsequent course of dealing can change its nature, and, although trustee's treatment of the corpus may throw light on grantor's intention where other criteria coincide, such treatment does not control where there are opposing indicia of his purpose clearly expressed.—MacManus v. C. I. R., supra.

of modification reserved, or unless a provision for such power was omitted by mistake, be changed, altered, or modified by the settlor without the consent of the beneficiaries,⁵⁷ and this is true even though the trust is a voluntary one.⁵⁸

The settlor and trustee may not, without the beneficiaries' consent, modify the trust to the prejudice of the beneficiaries,⁵⁹ although it is permissible to modify the trust where the settlor surrenders privileges retained under the trust instrument,⁶⁰ nor may a trust agreement be modified by agreement between one of the settlors and the trustee, without the consent of the other settlor or of the beneficiaries.⁶¹ The consent of some of the beneficiaries to a change or modification of a trust does not affect the status of other beneficiaries who do not consent.⁶²

Reversionary interest

(1) Whether trust for payment of income to settlor creates a reversionary interest in others, so that settlor cannot modify the agreement without their consent, depends on the intent of the settlor as disclosed in the language used in the trust instrument. Trust held to create no remainder interests, and settlor, as sole beneficiary, was authorized to modify trust instrument so that trustees could pay him more than fixed amount of income.—May v. Marx, 20 N.E.2d 821, 300 Ill.App. 144.

(2) However, a grantor could carve out and confer additional benefits and estates from his reserved reversionary interest without consent or participation of person to whom trustee is required to pay income.—In re Isaacs' Trust, 83 N.Y.S.2d 808.

(3) Where trust indenture created a reversion and not a remainder in grantor's heirs, consent of grantor's heirs was not necessary to amendments eliminating right of grantor to alter or revoke disposition of corpus and providing for payment of corpus of trust to grantor's brother on death of grantor.—In re Prehn, 132 N.Y.S.2d 244.

Infant remainderman

An infant holder of vested remainder under trust agreement could not consent to modification authorizing substitution of realty for real estate corporation stock as corpus of trust, but infant's inability to consent did not affect validity of substitution agreed to by grantor, life beneficiary, contingent remaindermen, and trustee, where agreement, prior to modification, authorized trustee, with approval of grantor, to sell or exchange securities forming trust fund or to reinvest fund in securities, and infant was not harmed by such substitution. A trust indenture, reserving to grantor right to pass on reinvestment or sale of trust principal, with such right passing to executors of grantor's estate in event of grantor's death during continuance of trust, and reserving no power to revoke or modify terms in other respects, could not be changed so as to require life beneficiary or survivor of grantor or life beneficiary, or their designee, to approve projected sale of trust property, where infant remainderman was alive and was not a party to attempted change and could not be bound thereby.—In re Isaacs' Trust, 83 N.Y.S.2d 808.

Settlor as sole party in interest affected

A deed of trust giving a life interest to settlor's wife and, at her death, vesting in settlor a general testamentary power of appointment of the entire principal without a gift over in default of appointment, although expressly declared to be irrevocable, may be modified by means of a subsequent deed of trust, since settlor himself, as donee of the power of appointment and as the holder of any right of reversion or interest not passing thereunder, is the only party in interest affected by the supplemental deed; if no attempt is made to change the trust provisions in favor of settlor's wife, her consent to modification of the trust is unnecessary.—In re Jackson's Estate, 50 Pa. Dist. & Co. 292, affirmed in re Jackson's Trust, 40 A.2d 393, 351 Pa. 89.

Detaching from trust; affidavit

Where trust was express and completed, nothing that grantor did thereafter could detract therefrom, and affidavit which grantor filed for record and which sought to detract from trust, was without force or effect.—Wynekoop v. Wynekoop, 95 N.E.2d 457, 407 Ill. 219.

Eate and burden of trustee's commissions

c. By Trustee

- (1) In general
- (2) Deviation authorized by court

(1) In General

Except as permitted by the trust terms, a trustee may not alter the terms without the beneficiaries' assent.

After accepting a trust, a trustee may not, without the assent of the beneficiaries,⁶⁷ alter the Proposed modification by life tenants by proceeding to which remaindermen are not parties was not justified, and refusal by trustee or chancellor was not abuse of discretion, where the proposed modification raised issues in which the remaindermen had a vital interest.—Reedy v. Johnson's Estate, 26 So.2d 685, 200 Miss 205.

Effect on rights of others interested A beneficiary may consent to the diminution or release of his own rights, but cannot affect or reduce by admission, acquiescence, or consent the rights of other persons interested in the estate.—In re Andrade's Estate, 31 N.Y.S.2d 25, 177 Misc. 532

Trustor as sole beneficiary during lifetime

Where father, who conveyed his property to two sons in trust, was sole beneficiary during his lifetime, his children had no claim to property except as heirs and next of kin, and validity of instruments relating to trust property, by virtue of which one child obtained property, could not be contested by the other children during father's lifetime; statute making relatives liable for support of paupers could not be relied on by children as basis for suit to contest validity of instruments, in absence of any evidence that father was a pauper.—Dodge v. Dodge, 32 A.2d 619, 69 R.I. 187.

terms thereof,⁶⁸ unless, and except as, permitted by the terms of the trust.⁶⁹ A trust created in writing cannot be varied by a subsequent declaration of the trustee.⁷⁰

Extension of trust. Persons free to contract may grant trustees the power to extend the trust in any manner and under any conditions.⁷¹

(2) Deviation Authorized by Court

In an emergency, or in circumstances not anticipated by the settlor, an equity court may, in order to preserve the trust or effectuate its purpose, authorize the trustee to deviate from its terms.

A court of chancery cannot alter or enlarge the powers conferred on the trustees by a valid trust instrument.⁷² However, in an emergency, a court of equity may, for the preservation of the trust and the protection of the beneficiaries from loss, authorize a trustee to depart from the terms of the trust agreement;⁷³ and a threatened loss of the trust estate constitutes an emergency within this rule.⁷⁴ So, a court will permit or direct a trustee to deviate from the terms of a trust if, owing to circumstances not known to the settlor or not anticipated, compliance would defeat, or substantially impair, the accomplishment of the purposes of the trust,⁷⁵ or where compliance is impossible,⁷⁶ illegal,⁷⁷ impracticable,⁷⁸ or inexpedient.⁷⁹ Under such circumstances, if necessary to carry out the purposes of the trust, the court may direct or permit the trustee to do acts which are not authorized, or are forbidden, by the terms of the trust.⁸⁰ A court of equity will put itself in the trustor's place and endeavor to authorize the trustee to deviate from the terms of the trust in a manner which the court believes the trustor would himself have authorized

if he could have anticipated a necessity for subsequent alteration of his plan.⁸¹ This doctrine of equitable deviation applies to private, as well as to charitable, trusts.⁸² An exception to the doctrine is that property devoted to physical use in carrying out the trust, and on which the institution provided for is supposed to rest, cannot be sold or encumbered if such sale or encumbrance is prohibited by the instrument creating the trust.⁸³

and not the mere fact that thereby the estate may be administered in a way which will be more advantageous to its beneficiaries than compliance with the terms of the trust.⁸⁶ This power of the court should be exercised only where emergencies and reasonable necessity may dictate,⁸⁷ and then only for the preservation of the trust estate and the protection of the cestuis;⁸⁸ it is not illimitable.⁸⁹ So, deviation may be authorized with respect to matters of administration,⁹⁰ but not of beneficial rights of parties.⁹¹

Consent of parties. Where the living parties in interest request the permission of the court for deviation from the terms of the trust, they thereby submit to the court, for its determination, the questions presented, so that their agreement, or consent, to such deviation does not relieve the court of decision.⁹² A court of equity may authorize a deviation by the trustees from the authority granted in the trust instrument where an unforeseen emergency requires that some course be taken by the trustees for the best interests of the estate and beneficiaries, even though the consent of all the beneficiaries cannot be obtained.⁹³

Retroactive approval may be given by a court to acts of a trustee beyond his powers, as defined by the terms of the trust, where the court would have approved such acts, in advance of their performance, as effecting the preservation of the estate.⁹⁴

Where a sale is authorized as a deviation from the terms of the trust, the rights of the parties remain the same, except that they are transferred from the property to the proceeds of the sale thereof.⁹⁵

Effect of statutes. Where all parties join in the prayers of a bill brought by trustees and seeking permission to deviate from the express terms of a trust, the equity court has been held, under specific statute and equity practice, to have authority to pass on the questions involved.⁹⁶ A particular statute has been held not to enable the court to exercise solely on the basis of economics, and in the absence of any emergency or reasonable necessity, its power to authorize trustees to pursue a course, or perform acts, which they are not permitted to do under the terms of the trust.⁹⁷

A trust containing no reserved power of revocation may generally not be revoked by the settlor without the beneficiaries' consent, in the absence of fraud, mistake, undue influence, or duress.

A revocation of a trust implies the cessation and extinguishment of the trust, and when made operates to put an end to it rather than to carry out its terms.⁷ Cancellation of a trust by the court in whole or in part is not a revocation.⁸ The same principles have been declared to be applicable to the revocation of a trust as are applicable to the modification thereof.⁹

It has been broadly held, or the principle has been broadly applied, that when a trust has been perfectly created, it is not revocable at the will of the party who created it,¹⁰ and that, unless the power of rev-

Right to remove cotrustee

Where trust agreement provided that settlor-trustee had right to remove corporate cotrustee and to name successor corporate trustee and that in event of his failure to do so a named trust company should act as trustee, settlor could not revoke trust by exercising his right to remove cotrustee.—Petition of Stevens, 125 N.Y.S.2d 386, 282 App.Div. 571, affirmed 121 N.E.2d 551, 307 N.Y. 742.

tee,²² and includes not only an express revocation, but any acts, dealings, or conveyances by the creator inconsistent with the trust.²³ The rule is not affected by the fact that the transaction creating the trust rests in parol.²⁴

A settlor may revoke the trust with the consent of the beneficiaries.²⁵ A conveyance in trust, even when it contains no power of revocation, may be rescinded on the same grounds on which any transfer, not in trust, can be rescinded;²⁶ the failure to include a power to revoke limits only the power of the settlor to terminate the trust estate without legal cause.²⁷ So, an executed deed or conveyance in trust may be revoked if made for a promised consideration which fails.²⁸

Partial or total revocation. Where revocation by the settlor is permissible, it may be total or partial.²⁹

The right to change the beneficiary does not make a trust revocable.³⁰

Effect of declaring trust irrevocable. The fact that a trust is, by its terms, declared irrevocable does not, under some decisions, necessarily prevent or preclude revocation.³¹ However, in particular circumstances provisions for irrevocability have been enforced or applied.³²

b. Voluntary Trusts Generally

Except as otherwise provided by statute, a voluntary trust containing no reserved power of revocation generally cannot be revoked without the consent of the beneficiaries or persons beneficially interested.

Revocation is not an incident which the law automatically attaches to a trust on the ground merely that it is of a voluntary character.³⁴ Accordingly, it has been held that a voluntary trust is irrevocable unless the power of revocation is reserved by the donor when creating it,³⁵ and that a voluntary settlor, in the absence of mental incapacity, fraud, undue influence, or mistake, cannot set aside an indenture of trust in which he has not reserved to himself alone the power of revocation.³⁶ Under other authority, if the power to revoke is not reserved, it does not necessarily follow that revocation is forbidden.³⁷ If the intent to make a voluntary trust irrevocable is perfectly apparent, it cannot be disturbed.³⁸

Except as is otherwise provided by statute, in the absence of a reservation of the power of revocation a voluntary trust is irrevocable without the consent of all the beneficiaries,³⁹ or of all persons beneficially interested,⁴⁰ at least where the omission of the power of revocation was deliberate.⁴¹ On the other hand, a voluntary trust may be revoked at the instance of the trustor, on consent of income and principal for settlor's support, and, on his death, after payment of debts, to distribute balance to his lawful heirs, and providing that it should be irrevocable and incapable of modification, could not be revoked by settlor.—Kaufman v. Hiestand, 200 A. 251, 131 Pa.Super. 219.

Destruction of limitation over

A settlor should not be permitted to destroy limitation over to children and issue, particularly where, by express declaration, he omits all power of revocation or alteration.—McCready's Estate v. Pitts, 47 A.2d 235, 354 P. 347.

Knowledge of nature of act

Voluntary trust deed properly executed, with knowledge of nature of act, and without reservation of power to revoke, is irrevocable.—Alderman v. Alderman, 181 S.E. 397, 178 S.C. 9, 105 A.L.R. 102.

"Unless a living trust is revocable, the settlor is not privileged to undo his act, merely because the act was a voluntary one, or because all the assets thereof were his own property, or because the beneficiaries thereof are the recipients of his bounty."—Chase Nat. Bank of New York City v. Reinicke, 10 N.Y.S.2d 420, 431.

Subsequent trust held void

Trust, changing, without beneficiaries' consent, a previously executed voluntary trust not reserving power of revocation, was void.—Krause v. Jeannette Inv. Co., 62 S.W.2d 890, 333 Mo. 509.

No revocation by will

(1) A deed in trust, which although voluntary, reserved no power of revocation, and in which settlor was not the sole beneficiary, was not subject to revocation by a subsequent will of the settlor.—Bryant v. Sevier, 20 So.2d 582, 197 Miss. 457.

(2) Transfer of stock, the trust res, by settlor to trustees, in accordance with trust agreement, vested trustees with title thereto, and settlor's execution of will on same day, creating trust in residue of estate, did not revoke agreement.—Krause v. Jeannette Inv. Co., 62 S.W.2d 890, 333 Mo. 509.

(3) Mode of revocation generally see infra § 91.

Benefit to others

In order to be irrevocable, voluntary trust deed must contain some benefit or advantage to others than settlor or be made to protect him against his wasteful habits, intemperance, etc.—Long v. Tradesmen's Nat. Bank & Trust Co., 165 A. 66, 108 Pa.Super. 363.

Infant and unascertainable beneficiaries

A voluntary trust without reservation of right of revocation could not be revoked at trustor's instance, although all adult beneficiaries in being consented, where trust was also created for infant beneficiaries and beneficiaries who could not be ascertained until time for distribution of corpus, and it did not appear that trust was created under inequitable circumstances.—Simon v. all the beneficiaries.⁴² If any of the beneficiaries are not in being,⁴³ or are not sui juris,⁴⁴ and hence cannot consent, the trust agreement cannot be revoked.

c. Statutory Provisions Generally

The effect, on a particular trust, of a statute dealing with the revocation of trusts depends on the purpose and intent of the trust and the facts of the particular case.

Under some statutes every trust is revocable by the trustor, unless expressly made irrevocable by the terms of the instrument creating it.⁴⁵ Where it is so provided by statute, a trust completely created and containing no power of revocation may not be revoked without the consent of all the beneficiaries⁴⁶ or of persons beneficially interested in a trust in personal property.⁴⁷ When such consent is obtained, revocation by the creator is permitted.⁴⁸ Such a statute has been held not to be in derogation of the common law,⁴⁹ so that it is not to be strictly construed.⁵⁰ The purpose of its enactment was, in effect, an attempt to restore, at least in part, the rule or policy of the common law which prohibited the creation under a trust of rights which could not be alienated by the cestui or beneficiary thereunder.⁵¹ Such a statute has been held retroactive in applying to trusts created before its enactment, as well as those created thereafter.⁵² The

(1) Consent of settlor is a cardinal requirement, and approval of beneficiaries alone is insufficient.—Culver v. Title Guaranty & Trust Co., 58 N.Y.S.2d 116, 269 App.Div. 627.—Thatcher v. Empire Trust Co., 277 N.Y.S. 874, 243 App.Div. 430.

(2) In order to effect a revocation, all the settlors must join therein.—Culver v. Title Guaranty & Trust Co., 70 N.E.2d 163, 286 N.Y. 74.

Death of parties

(1) Trust established by three set-tlors could not be revoked as to the share contributed by the surviving settlors after the death of one settlor.—Culver v. Title Guaranty & Trust Co., 70 N.E.2d 163, 286 N.Y. 74.

(2) Where one of joint settlors died, consent of beneficiaries and of residuary legatee under will of deceased settlor did not warrant revocation of the entire trust; surviving settlors could, with beneficiaries' consent, abrogate trust as to property conveyed to the trust by such surviving settlors, but instrument purporting to revoke the entire trust was improper and trustee was entitled to require a writing in proper form revoking only as much of the trust as consisted of property originally conveyed by the surviving settlor.—Culver v. Title Guaranty & Trust Co., 58 N.Y.S.2d 116, 269 App.Div. 627.

(3) Trust in favor of settlor's mother, created pursuant to agreement with his sister and grandmother that settlor and sister would create trusts for mother and grandmother would then refrain from exercising power of appointment over portion of deceased husband's estate which she had intended to exercise for benefit of their mother, could not be revoked even with mother's consent, after death of settlor's sister and grandmother, after fulfilling their obligations under agreement.—New York Trust Co. v. Weaver, 80 N.E.2d 56, 298 N.Y. 1.—Sutterfield v. Manufacturers & Traders Trust Co., 69 N.Y.S.2d 786, 272 App.Div. 127.

Death of creator prevents revocation under such statute, in suit by trustee, since statute envisages revocation by creator on consents given in accordance therewith.—Kornfeld v. Mode, 78 N.Y.S.2d 847.

Appointment of beneficiaries for revocation

In trust deed authorizing grantor to change beneficiaries and modify their interests, proviso that "in no event shall any such modification or alteration direct that said income be paid to or applied to the use or benefit of the [grantor]" operated to prevent him from exercising his power so as to acquire income directly or indirectly in violation of the purpose of the limitations, and to preclude appointment of beneficiaries under an agreement to cooperate with grantor in revoking the trust.—Knapp v. rights of the parties are to be determined as of the date of the application for revocation.⁵³ Such a statute may be applicable only to a trust in personal property;⁵⁴ if it is a trust consisting of realty and personalty it may be revoked as to the personalty, with the consent of the persons beneficially interested.⁵⁵

Necessarily, the revocability or irrevocability of the trust in each instance, under the statute, depends on the particular trust involved, its purpose, and its manifested intent;⁵⁶ each case must necessarily depend on its own particular facts⁵⁷ and, above all, on the ascertained intention of the settlor of the trust.⁵⁸ A power of revocation arising by operation of law has been held neither alienable⁵⁹ nor descendible.⁶⁰

Voluntary trust. Some statutes provide for the revocation of voluntary trusts under appropriate circumstances,⁶¹ but under a statute providing that the creator of a trust may revoke it on the written consent of all the persons beneficially interested therein, a grantor of a trust cannot revoke it, without the consent of the beneficiaries, because it is voluntary and without a valuable consideration.⁶² A statute providing that unless expressly made irrevocable by the instrument creating the trust, every voluntary trust shall be revocable by the trustor by writing filed with the trustee, and that when a voluntary trust is revoked by the trustor, the trustee shall transfer to the trustor his full title to the trust estate, has been applied in appropriate situations.⁶³ Under such statute, the grantor in an in-

Reversion or remainder

Whether settlor intended to reserve reversion in herself, so as to permit her to revoke trust, or intended to make gift in remainder, so as to require consent of remaindermen to revocation, must be determined from terms of trust agreement; and settlor's intention, as expressed therein, is the controlling factor.—Richardson v. 51. In North Carolina

(1) Under the statute providing that the grantor in any voluntary conveyance in which some future interest in real estate is conveyed or limited to a person not in esse may, at any time before he comes into being, revoke by deed such interest so conveyed or limited, and that the grantor who has heretofore created or may hereafter create a voluntary trust estate in real or personal property for the use and benefit of himself or of any other person or persons in esse with a future contingent interest to some person or persons not in esse or not determined until the happening of a future event may at any time, prior to the happening of the contingency vesting the future estates, revoke the grant of the interest to such person or persons not in esse or not determined by a proper instrument to that effect; provided, that in the event the instrument creating such estate has been recorded, the deed of revocation of such estate shall be likewise recorded before it becomes effective.—Stanback v. Citizens' Nat. Bank of Raleigh, 148 S.E. 313, 197 N.C. 292.—65 C.J. p. 341 note 27 [a].

(3) Where land was conveyed, by conveyance containing no provision against revocation, in trust to two persons for life and at their death to surviving grantors or children of such as may be dead who shall take as their parents would have if living, and those grantors who were dead were intestate without issue, and surviving grantors had no issue, a deed of revocation executed by survivors within the time allowed by statute vested title in them which was good as against a purchaser's claim of defect.—Kirkland v. Deck, 45 S.E. 2d 538, 228 N.C. 438.

(3) Under such statute, where trustor in amended trust agreement waived right of revocation, but the waiver was without consideration, trustor was not precluded from exercising the statutory right to revoke voluntary trust agreement, and where trustor authorized trustee to pay income from trust estate to trustor and, upon her death, to distribute trust estate to her surviving children and in absence of issue to pay estate to named individual if living, and if not, to trustor's general heirs, and where trustor had no children and the named beneficiary agreed to revocation, trustor's revocation of the trust agreement was valid.—MacMillan v. Branch Banking & Trust Co., 20 S.E.2d 276, 221 N.C. 352.

Voluntary trust generally see supra subdivision b of this section.

Scope of statute; security

In such statute, the expression "voluntary trust" is used in the restricted sense of a trust created freely and without a valuable consideration or legal obligation, and does not apply to a deed of trust given as security for payment of an obligation.—Toult v. Santa Cruz County Title Co., 67 P.2d 404, 20 Cal.App.2d 495.

Trust held voluntary

U.S.—Gaylord v. C. I. R., C.C.A.9, 153 F.2d 408.

Effect of limiting statute

Where express, voluntary trust provided benefits for trustor for life and for two third persons after his death, he was entitled to revoke trust under such statute, notwithstanding section limiting application of that strument containing no provision as to revocability has the power to revoke the trust and thus retake the corpus.⁶⁴ The statute has been construed as allowing revocation, within its provisions, without the consent of the beneficiaries.⁶⁵

Effect of declaring trust irrevocable. Under a statute allowing revocation of a trust in personal property on the consent of all persons beneficially interested, the fact that a trust by its terms is declared irrevocable does not prevent the settlor from revoking it, if all necessary parties consent.⁶⁶ So, a prohibition against revocation by the settlor by exercise of the right to amend or modify does not serve to deprive the settlor of his right to invoke the revocation provisions of the statute.⁶⁷

Effect of notice of revocation. Where the statute permits revocation of a trust in personal property on the consent of all persons beneficially interested, the receipt by the trustee of a notice of revocation does not immediately terminate the trust⁶⁸ or give the creator thereof an immediate right to the possession of the trust corpus;⁶⁹ and on such receipt there is no automatic cessation of the trustee's duties and responsibilities.⁷⁰

Power in trust. Where it is so provided by statute, a power in trust is irrevocable unless the authority to revoke is reserved.⁷¹

d. Persons Beneficially Interested

In a statute permitting revocation of a trust in personal property by the creator on consent of "all persons beneficially interested" therein, the quoted words include any person who, under the terms of the trust indenture, has a right, whether present or future, vested or contingent, to income or principal of the trust.

It has been held the generally accepted rule that a trust may be revoked on the mutual consent of the settlor and all parties having a beneficial interest in the trust,⁷² even though it is a spendthrift trust.⁷³ A person, in order to have such a beneficial interest that the trust cannot be revoked without his consent, must have an interest taken by purchase under particular code chapter to express trust created for benefit of another than trustor.—Title Ins. & Trust Co. v. McGraw, 164 P.2d 846, 72 Cal App. 2d 390.

Tax return referring to irrevocability
Where instrument creating voluntary trust did not contain provision making trust irrevocable, the fact that grantors filed gift tax returns reporting creation of irrevocable trust did not have effect of amending the trust declaration so as to destroy the grantors' power, under statute, to revoke the trust.—Gaylord v. C. I. R., C.C.A.9, 153 F.2d 408.

standing. That statute reflects the public policy which looks with disfavor upon restraints on alienation."—Guaranty Trust Co. of N. Y. v. Howe, 86 N.Y.S.2d 808, 813, 193 Misc. 640.

Reservation of right to amend

Under the statute, a settlor who has reserved the right to amend the trust in any manner whatsoever or in any and every respect may revoke the trust even though it is in terms irrevocable.—In re Woodward's Trust, 132 N.Y.S.2d 265, 284 App. Div. 459, appeal denied 132 N.Y.S.2d 924, 284 App. Div. 838.

Refusal to pay without legal determination

Trustee was entitled to refuse to pay over corpus of trust without authoritative determination by court that trust had been legally revoked.

Action of replevin

(1) An action of replevin against a trustee of a personal trust, in trustee's individual capacity, will not do as substitute for an accounting by trustee when it appears patently that no valid reason exists therefor, particularly where plaintiff has no immediate right to possession, creator's claim that replevin action was necessary to recover corpus of trust because he might otherwise be deprived of damages if securities in fund had declined in value could not be sustained, because, if trustee unduly delayed in winding up trust, trustee was liable for depreciation; where creator served notice of revocation and demand for return of trust property on January 25, and served complaint in replevin action on following March 1, trustee did not have reasonable time to wind up affairs of trust and to account, and complaint was properly dismissed.—Neary v. City Bank Farmers Trust Co., supra.

the terms of the trust agreement;⁷⁴ if the interest is one taken by descent rather than purchase, it is not such as to require his consent for revocation.⁷⁵

The determination of the question as to who are beneficially interested in a trust, under a statute permitting revocation by the creator on the consent of all persons beneficially interested in a trust in personal property, requires a construction of the deed or instrument of trust.⁷⁶ The question depends on whether the interest which the person has in the trust estate possesses the attributes of descendibility, devisability, or alienability;⁷⁷ if the interest which one has in a trust estate possesses none of these attributes, it cannot be said to be a beneficial interest.⁷⁸ The words "persons beneficially interested in a trust of personal property," as used in such a statute, are broad;⁷⁹ where the statute contains no express restriction on the nature of the "beneficial interest," the courts may not by implication read such restriction into the statute.⁸⁰ The words include any person who, under the terms of the trust indenture, has a right, whether present or future, vested or contingent, to income or principal of the trust fund;⁸¹ the test is one of substance and not of form,⁸² and any right given by the trust instrument to receive a benefit from the trust in some contingency is a "beneficial interest" in the trust.⁸³ The words "persons beneficially interested" are not to be construed to include those not in being who might in some contingency be entitled to an estate;⁸⁴ the consent of all persons in being beneficially interested in the trust satisfies the statute,⁸⁵ and the possibility of unborn persons becoming interested does not prevent a revocation.⁸⁶ The con-

Present beneficial interest

Statute requires only consent of those persons who have a present beneficial interest in the trust and who would take if trust were terminated at time revocation was attempted.—Thatcher v. Empire Trust Co., 277 N.Y.S. 874, 243 App.Div. 430.

No remaindermen in existence

Trustee was not obligated to object to revocation on behalf of possible remaindermen, where there are none in existence.—City Bank Farmers Trust Co. v. Neary, supra.

Possible issue having vested remainders

Revocation executed by settlors and all beneficiaries then in being was not ineffectual because of failure to obtain consent of persons not in being, or their representatives, who were mentioned in provision for gift over to issue of beneficiaries, even assuming that any possible issue, on birth, would have vested remainders.—Levy v. Empire Trust Co., 54 N.Y.S.2d 817, 269 App.Div. 188.

Unborn children or infants

(1) The consent of unborn children is not required by the statute.—Levy v. Empire Trust Co., 54 N.Y.S.2d 817, 269 App.Div. 188—Kuntze v. Guaranty Trust Co. of New York, 290 N.Y.S. 812, 248 App.Div. 871—Application of New York Trust Co., 114 N.Y.S.2d 213—Well v. New York Trust Co., 109 N.Y.S.2d 430.

(2) Where infant beneficiaries of trust were not in being at time of attempted revocation by grantor trustees and certain contingent beneficiaries, consent of infants was unnecessary.—Ingersoll v. Fifth Ave. Bank of N. Y., 91 N.Y.S.2d 581.

(3) Where trust deed provided that if settlor's daughter should predecease settlor, the trust principal should, on death of settlor, be paid to her son if living, and if not to his lawful issue, if any, and if none, then to legal representative of settlor, un-

sent of the presumptive distributees as against potential distributees fulfills the requirement of the statute.⁸⁷

Reversion; contingent beneficiaries

(1) Where settlor reserves a reversion to himself, those persons or classes of persons named as contingent beneficiaries are not beneficially interested in trust within statute.—Green v. City Bank Farmers Trust Co., 72 N.Y.S.2d 442.

(2) If settlor retains reversion passing on his death to heirs or next of kin, their consent to revocation is unnecessary, since they would take, if at all, not as purchasers through beneficial right derived from trust instrument, but through succession to interest of settlor, who could consent to destruction of such interest.—Schoellkopf v. Marine Trust Co. of Buffalo, 196 N.E. 288, 267 N.Y. 358.

(3) Where settlor assigned securities to trustee with directions to pay income to settlor during his life and that on his death corpus, in default of his appointment by will, should pass according to intestacy laws, trust indenture evinced intention that after settlor's death corpus should belong to his appointees or heirs, and legal effect was to create a reversion and not a remainder.—Sinnott v. City Bank Farmers Trust Co., 71 N.Y.S.2d 514.

Grantor's next of kin

Where trust agreement provided that on grantor's death trustee should pay principal and accumulated income to such persons as grantor designated by her will and made no provision as to disposition of trust estate in case grantor failed to designate persons to take it after her death, grantor's next of kin were not persons beneficially interested.—City Bank Farmers Trust Co. v. Neary, 27 N.Y.S.2d 979, appeal dismissed 27 N.Y.S.2d 1017, 261 App.Div. 1079, reargument denied 28 N.Y.S.2d 707, 262 App.Div. 766.

Taking only in event of reverter

Where the settlor's granddaughter did not take a beneficial interest under the terms of an inter vivos trust, did not participate as a purchaser under such terms, and had only the possibility of taking if there were a reverter to the settlor, her consent was not necessary to a revocation of the trust.—In re Falconer's Estate, 47 N.Y.S.2d 35, opinion adhered to 56 N.Y.S.2d 84, 184 Misc. 468.

Daughter's support included in wife's needs

Where trust agreement provided that settlor's wife was to receive entire income during her life, invasions of principal by the trustee were permitted only in her favor, and her needs also included provision for the education, care, and support of settlor's daughter as trustee might deem necessary, settlor's daughter was not a person beneficially interested in the trust whose consent to revocation was necessary.—Ribman v. City Bank Farmers Trust Co., 49 N.Y.S.2d 322, 268 App.Div. 800.

to work the transformation must be clearly expressed.⁹⁰

The consent of a trustee asserting no beneficial interest is unnecessary,⁹¹ even though the trust indenture gives him an imperative power in trust.⁹² The incidental benefit that the trustee may derive from commissions is not of such a character as gives him a vested right to the continuance of the trust.⁹³ Where the creator reserves in the trust instrument the right of amendment, and under such power eliminates a beneficiary from the trust, such person ceases to be a person beneficially interested.⁹⁴ Likewise, where a life beneficiary waives all of his interest under the trust, and the settlor names another life beneficiary, the instrument of waiver, if regarded as a partial revocation by the settlor, to which the original beneficiary consented, is valid.⁹⁵

e. Settlor as Sole Beneficiary or Person Beneficially Interested

Even though no power of revocation is reserved, a settlor may revoke the trust where he is the sole beneficiary, or, under a statute permitting revocation with the consent of persons beneficially interested, where he is the only person beneficially interested.

Although there is no power of revocation reserved, a settlor may revoke the trust where he is the sole beneficiary,⁹⁶ with⁹⁷ or without⁹⁸ the consent of the trustee, unless by the terms of the trust instrument the assent of the trustee is necessary.⁹⁹ Where the settlor is the only person beneficially interested within the terms of a statute permitting revocation with the consent of persons beneficially interested, as discussed supra subdivision c of this section, he may revoke the trust although there is no power reserved,¹ and although the instrument ex-

Term "estate," as used in trust agreement directing disposition of principal on settlor's death as part of his estate in default of appointment of taker by settlor's will, was not equivalent to term "heirs" so as to preclude settlor's revocation withpressly states that it is irrevocable;² and this may be done without the consent of the trustee.³

f. Effect of Revocation

The beneficiary's interest in a trust ceases on revocation by the grantor.

When the power of revocation of a trust is once effectively exercised, a subsequent exercise thereof is void and ineffective.⁴ When the grantor exercises a power of revocation, the interest of the beneficiary ceases,⁵ and an assignee of the grantor takes the corpus of the trust free from the trust.⁶ Where grantors contribute unequally to the trust, it is a reasonable inference that the interests which will revest on the exercise of the power of revocation will be in proportion to the respective contributions.⁷ Trust property is revested in a settlor without a reconveyance by the trustee on the revocation of a trust created by the settlor for himself as beneficiary with remainder over to the executors appointed by his will.⁸ Where a trust is revoked by the parties, and the trust was simply a part of a larger transaction, it will be held to have been the intention of the parties to revoke the entire agreement and to be restored to their respective rights as they existed prior to the agreement.⁹

The effect of the termination of a trust is discussed infra § 96.

g. Actions

Generally, an action to revoke a trust is one in personam. In such an action, the general requirements as to pleading and evidence must be met.

Generally, an action to revoke a trust is one in personam.¹⁰ Where a trust is specifically made irrevocable without the consent of the trustee and the beneficiaries, it is error to deny a contingent beneficiary's petition to intervene in a suit by the settlor to dissolve the trust.¹¹ Where a beneficiary, bringing an action for partial revocation, relies on certain consents, a trustee bank, not represented at the execution of the trust and not a party thereto, has been held not chargeable with prima facie knowledge of the due execution of such consents, and hence is not required to plead affirmatively fraud or duress;¹² and in such circumstances plaintiff has been held not entitled to judgment on the pleadings.¹³

Under a statute construed as allowing revocation of a voluntary trust by the trustor without the consent of the beneficiaries, the beneficiaries are not necessary or indispensable parties to the trustor's action for rescission of the trust.¹⁴ A beneficiary bringing an action to revoke a trust has the burden of proving the due execution of the consents.¹⁵ One seeking to revoke a trust on the ground that he is able to manage his own affairs has the burden of proving a sufficient change in his condition since a previous decree refusing to revoke the trust;¹⁶ and in such circumstances, testimony is properly limited to any change in complainant's condition since the date of the previous decree.¹⁷

Particular evidence has been held sufficient to sustain findings that there was a reservation of an express power of revocation,¹⁸ that the revocation of a trust was valid,¹⁹ and that complainant's mental condition had not changed for the better since a prior decree refusing to revoke a trust.²⁰ In a suit wherein the settlor sought a judgment declaring that a trust agreement was revocable, evidence has been held insufficient to establish his claim that the omission of the power of revocation was the result of inadvertence and mistake.²¹

h. Deposit of Money in Bank or Other Financial Institution

- (1) Revocation in general
- (2) Revocation by subsequent will

(1) Revocation in General

In order to revoke a tentative trust in a bank account, the depositor must, by declarations or acts, decisively show an intention to revoke it.

Where an absolute or irrevocable trust is created in a deposit of money in a savings bank or similar institution, as discussed supra § 54, the trust is not revoked by a return of the passbook at the donor's request in the absence of evidence that he intended to revoke the trust and that the donee consented thereto;²² and in the absence of fraud, accident, or mistake, no subsequent acts or declarations of the donor or settlor can revoke the trust without the consent of the other party.²³ While a tentative trust is revocable at will during the lifetime of the depositor, as discussed supra § 54, a trust completely created by a person depositing his own money in his own name in a savings bank in trust for another without a reservation of the power of revocation is irrevocable by the depositor during his lifetime without the consent of the beneficiary.²⁴

In order to revoke or disaffirm a tentative trust, the depositor must, by his declarations or acts, decisively or affirmatively show an intention to revoke the trust;²⁵ but no particular formalities are necessary to manifest such an intention.²⁶ An act consistent with the continuance of the trust is insufficient,²⁷ as is a mere intention to revoke, not carried into effect.²⁸ It has been held that the

Failure to sign withdrawal slips

Where depositor established accounts in his own name in trust for his niece, and niece delivered bankbooks to him, together with with-

settlor-trustee may revoke in any way he chooses,²⁹ and is not limited to revocation by withdrawal of the whole account,³⁰ although the reservation of the right to withdraw the full account amounts to a reservation of the general power to revoke.³¹

A tentative trust in a bank deposit is revoked where the depositor withdraws the money³² or deposits it in another account,³³ or notifies the depository,³⁴ or where he pledges the passbook to a third person from whom he borrows money;³⁵ and where the beneficiary predeceases the depositor, the trust is automatically revoked unless it has been made irrevocable by some act of the depositor.³⁶ Where the depositor subsequently transfers the account to the name of another in trust for the same

beneficiary, the new trustee has no beneficial interest, but such account is still for the use of the original beneficiary.³⁷

Revocation for incompetent. A court, acting for an incompetent who, prior to his adjudication as an incompetent, created a savings bank trust, can revoke the trust on behalf of the incompetent,³⁸ provided the equities so warrant,³⁹ and provided the trust has not become irrevocable by some unequivocal act or declaration.⁴⁰ The committee of an incompetent has been held to have no power to alter the relation of the persons interested in the incompetent's tentative savings account trust by electing to revoke it, where the proceeds are not required for the needs of the incompetent.⁴¹

(2) Revocation by Subsequent Will

Under most authorities, a depositor can revoke by his will a tentative trust in a bank deposit; whether his will has such effect depends on his apparent intention.

While a tentative trust which is not revoked or disaffirmed becomes absolute on the death of the depositor, as discussed supra § 54, nevertheless, according to most authorities, the depositor may revoke it by his will,⁴² in the absence of a specific declaration of disaffirmance,⁴³ but it has also been held that the trust cannot be revoked, in whole or in part, by a will.⁴⁴ Whether a will revokes a tentative trust depends on the intention of the testator.⁴⁵ The revocation need not be express,⁴⁶ and a will may operate to revoke the trust even though it is silent as to the bank account.⁴⁷ A tentative trust will be deemed revoked by a will where, in order to carry out the terms of the will, it is essential to include the bank deposit in the assets of the estate.⁴⁸

Where the trust account is bequeathed to a new legatee or beneficiary, the trust is revoked;⁴⁹ but a will bequeathing the account, or the money therein, to the beneficiary of the trust does not revoke the

The settlor of a trust may reserve the power to revoke it. Such a power is personal to the holder thereof, and has none of the attributes of property.

In the absence of statutory prohibition, and sometimes by reason of statute, the settlor of a trust may reserve in the trust instrument the power of revocation.⁵⁵ In case of such reservation, the trust continues until or unless revoked by exercise of the power;⁵⁶ if the power of revocation is reserved,

Unconditional or other gift

A mere unconditional bequest of fund to apparent beneficiary corroborates the conclusion that a trust for his benefit had been intended by the deposit for his benefit, but a bequest to him of such fund with express direction that it be paid to him upon his becoming of age was inconsistent with prior conditional gift and showed an intent to revoke it.—Delaware Trust Co. v. Fitzmaurice, 31 A.2d 383, 27 Del.Ch. 101, modified on other grounds Crumlish v. Delaware Trust Co., 38 A.2d 463, 27 Del.Ch. 374.

In an inter vivos trust, the grantor may, by appropriate reservation, retain the power to revoke it without the necessity of gaining the permission or consent of any contingent remainderman.—Application of Central Hanover Bank & Trust Co. Reconveyance by trustees

Trust agreement providing that trustees should reconvey on demand by beneficiary obligated them to reconvey on demand, unless they could show legal excuse for not so doing.—Coleman v. Coleman, 61 P.2d 441, 48 Ariz. 337, 106 A.L.R. 1309.

Parents' joint power to revoke; death of one

Where parents created a trust inter vivos for payment of income to their children for life, reserving power to modify in whole or part "at any time during their lifetime," and, with alleged purpose of punishing one son, directed trustee by letter to "pay to us the one-third" which had been paid to him, and father died, power to revoke was joint, and mother's direction to trustee to restore the income to the son, pursuant to father's alleged wish, did not authorize payment to son, since, where husband and wife jointly create a trust inter vivos, reserving joint power to revoke or amend, neither party should be allowed to destroy the trust after the other's death.—In re Solomon's Estate, 2 A.2d 825, 322 Pa. 462.

Reservation immaterial

Where husband and wife, as tenants by the entireties, conveyed property in trust, reserving to themselves a life estate with remainder to their daughters, reservation by them of power of revocation was immaterial in determining whether property was subject to execution under judgment against surviving husband.—Murrey v. C. I. T. Corp., 33 A.2d 16, 347 Pa. 591.

Expectant estate; effect of statute

Statute providing that holder of life estate may not defeat an estate in expectancy except by manner or means provided in instrument, imposes no restrictions on grantor or settlor of life estate and does not purport to say that he may not destroy expectant estate where he expressly reserves right to do so by suitable instrument.—Dreyer v. Beneficiaries' rights subject to termination

The rights acquired by the beneficiaries under a revocable trust are the trust is as good and effectual as if irrevocable, unless and until the power of revocation is exercised,⁵⁷ and until the power is exercised, the interests created by the trust remain unaffected.⁵⁸ The reservation of the power does not in any degree affect the legal title to the property;⁵⁹ it does not prevent the passing of a present interest to the property,⁶⁰ or the passing of title to the trustee.⁶¹ The reservation by a settlor, in addition to an interest for life, of a power to revoke the trust, does not make incomplete a gift over to the statutory next of kin.⁶² Under such a reserved power, revocation may be made only to the extent specified;⁶³ and where the settlor reserves the power to revoke a trust only under particular circumstances or conditions, he can revoke it only under those circumstances or conditions.⁶⁴

Nature of power. A power of revocation in a trust instrument is not property,⁶⁵ nor is it a property right⁶⁶ or an interest in property;⁶⁷ and it possesses none of the attributes of property.⁶⁸ Such a power is personal to the holder thereof.⁶⁹ It is not transferable,⁷⁰ alienable,⁷¹ or descendible.⁷² So, it may not be alienated or passed by a will,⁷³ nor, apart from the Bankruptcy Act,⁷⁴ may it be reached by creditors.⁷⁵ It is said to be similar, or akin,⁷⁶ or analogous,⁷⁷ to a power of appointment; and, if absolute and unconditional, is equivalent to a general power of appointment.⁷⁸

Creation and existence of power. The power of revocation need not be express.⁷⁹ If it exists by necessary implication under the terms of the trust, it may be exercised the same as if expressly reserved.⁸⁰ On the other hand, according to some authority, a trust conveyance is irrevocable unless the power of revocation is expressly reserved.⁸¹

By reserving the power of sale of the property which is the subject of the trust, the settlor reserves a power of revocation;⁸² and a grantor's reservation of the power to control the distribution of either income or principal, as he pleases, includes the power to abrogate the trust instrument.⁸³ A reservation, in a trust instrument, of the right to add to or decrease the trust fund from time to time, as the grantor may desire, includes the right to revoke the trust,⁸⁴ either in whole or in part,⁸⁵ especially where the grantor and the trustee are the only persons interested in the trust.⁸⁶

the settlor as cestui que trust some portion or all of the principal of the trust is not a power of revocation;⁸⁷ a provision permitting an invasion of the principal of a trust, but not below a minimal amount, is not the equivalent of a right of revocation;⁸⁸ and a provision, in a voluntary trust agreement, reserving to the settlor the right to change the trustees from time to time does not give the settlor power to revoke the trust without the consent of the beneficiaries.⁸⁹ A reservation to the donor, in a trust indenture making him cotrustee, of the right to have possession and sole access to, and the sole right of disposition of, the trust estate, without the consent or concurrence of the cotrustee, is not a reservation of a right of revocation.⁹⁰ An unrestricted power to modify a trust includes a power to revoke it;⁹¹ but a provision that the court may, in its discretion, modify, annul, or cancel a trust is not a reservation of the power to revoke,⁹² and a modification, by the settlor, of a voluntary trust agreement so as to make it more advantageous to

(2) A voluntary trust agreement providing for payment of income to settlor during his life and after his death to named widows' and orphans' home or alternative beneficiaries, disclosed no implied power of revocation.—Hines v. Louisville Trust Co., Ky., 254 S.W.2d 73.

Failure to notify beneficiary

Failure of the owner of property to notify the beneficiary of the declaration of trust, or beneficiary's nonacceptance of trust, is evidence that, although a trust is created, the owner reserves the power to revoke it.—Buhl v. Kavanagh, C.C.A.Mich., 118 F.2d 315.

Right to change beneficiaries

Where insured assigned life policy to trustees, and subsequently named trustees as beneficiaries, but expressly reserved right to make further change, the express reservation indicated intent that the trust be revocable, with the means of revocation a change of beneficiary from trustees to another.—Continental Assur. Co. v. Conroy, C.A.N.J., 209 F.2d 539.

Resignation of trustee

Where instrument creating trust named a successor trustee in event of resignation of first named trustee, such resignation did not indirectly effect a revocation of trust, since it was resigning trustee's duty, under statute, to protect trust estate pending settlement of account and discharge as trustee and delivery of corpus of trust to successor.—*Bixby v. Instruments held not revocable

(1) Conveyance by trustor to trustee which, by its terms, completely divested trustor of all title and interest in property and of all gains, profits, and income therefrom created an irrevocable trust, notwithstanding trustor and trustee named were the same person and that trustor reserved to himself, as sole trustee, all rights of control over property.—Dunn v. Dunn, supra.

(2) Where language of trust deed executed by husband and wife completely divested them of all interest in the property conveyed, the reference in the deed to a joint will executed by them was merely for the purpose of determining the method of distribution of the trust estate after death of surviving trustor, and the trust was created instantaneously by the delivery of the deed and acceptance of the trust, the trust deed was not revocable, and a later purported codicil to the joint will could the beneficiary does not indicate the intention of the settlor to retain the power of revocation.⁹³

By whom exercised. A power of revocation may be exercised only by the person in whom it resides⁹⁴ or to whom it is given.⁹⁵ In the absence of statute, where, by the terms of a trust instrument, a power of revocation has been reserved to the joint settlors of a trust, all must join in the revoking instrument in order to effect revocation,⁹⁶ and where one of them has died, attempted revocation by the survivors is a nullity.⁹⁷

Duration and termination of power. When not exercised, a power of revocation expires according to the terms of the trust instrument.⁹⁸ Where, by the terms of the trust instrument, the exercise of the reserved power of revocation is dependent on the consent of another person, the power is terminated on the death of such person.⁹⁹ The power terminates on the death of the settlor,¹ especially under a reservation that the settlor may during his life revoke the trust.²

Grant of power to others. The creator of a trust may grant to others powers of revocation.⁵

Relinquishment of power. The execution, by the grantor of a trust, of an instrument whereby he renounces, and declines to exercise, a reserved power to annul all or any of the uses set forth in the indenture does not prevent him from thereafter exercising such power;⁶ and where a settlor relinquishes his reserved power to revoke on consideration that others do likewise, he may, nevertheless, have the right to revoke for failure of consideration.⁷ In other circumstances, provisions for the relinquishment of the reserved power have been enforced or held operative,⁸ or the trustor has been held to have seasonably abandoned any idea he may have had of revoking the trust.⁹

Reason for rule

The power was based on a special confidence, not annexed to an office or engranted on an estate held by the donee of the power; a person intrusted with such a power cannot extinguish it, but may exercise it notwithstanding his covenant to the contrary.—Clark v. Freeman, supra.

tors are involved,¹¹ and particularly where by statute provision is made for the reservation of the power in a trust instrument.¹² Such a reservation has been held not contrary to public policy as offering a means of evading state and federal estate inheritance taxes or inconveniencing their collection.¹³ Also, such a reservation does not make the instrument testamentary in character, as discussed in Wills § 143.

Power not exercised. If the power of revocation is not actually exercised, the validity of the trust remains as unaffected as if the power had not been reserved.¹⁴

b. Omission

Failure to reserve a power of revocation does not necessarily invalidate a trust, particularly where revocability would defeat its purpose; but such failure may, in a particular case, show such misunderstanding by the settlor as to invalidate the trust.

The absence of a power of revocation from a trust instrument¹⁵ and the fact that the attention of the settlor was not called to that omission¹⁶ do not in themselves render the trust invalid. They are circumstances to be taken into account,¹⁷ in determining whether the transaction was the deliberate act of the settlor,¹⁸ and are of more or less weight ac-

Failure to vest title in trustee

Any invalidity of trust instrument in failing to vest title in trustees at time of execution because of power of revocation retained by grantor was immaterial, where if trust instrument was invalid, the property passed by residuary clause of grantor's will, which vested title in the same trustees for the same purposes immediately upon grantor's death.—Odum v. ording to the facts of the particular case.¹⁹ The absence of the power of revocation will not invalidate the trust where revocability would defeat the purpose of the trust.²⁰ For example, the absence of the power does not invalidate the trust where the purpose of the trust is to provide against the settlor's own improvidence,²¹ or against his inability, because of age or infirmities, to care for his property,²² or where it is evident that the trust is to continue during the settlor's life.²³

On the other hand, the failure of the settlor to reserve the power of revocation may, in a particular case, show such misunderstanding as to the nature of the instrument as to invalidate it,²⁴ or, in the case of a voluntary trust, may be viewed by a court of equity as a circumstance of suspicion,²⁵ so that very slight evidence of mistake, misapprehension, or misunderstanding on the part of the settlor will be sufficient to invalidate the instrument.²⁶

§ 91. — Mode of Revocation

- a. In general
- b. By subsequent will

a. In General

A mode of revocation provided for by statute or in the trust instrument must be followed; if none is provided for, revocation may be by any act or conveyance sufficient to terminate the trust or to manifest the settlor's intention to revoke.

The settlor's intention with respect to the mode of revocation must be drawn from a consideration of the entire instrument.²⁷ Where a mode of revocation is provided for by statute²⁸ or in the trust instrument,²⁹ an effective revocation may be made

(1) The settlor is bound by the method of dissolution of the trust selected by him—Schuster v. Schuster, 251 P.2d 631, 75 Ariz. 20.

(2) A grantor in deed allegedly creating trust, who reserved power to convey the property by "absolute deed or by mortgage," was not limited to the two methods of conveyance so as to preclude him from executing a second deed in trust and a will depriving beneficiary in first deed of the property, especially where beneficiary's interest was to be subjected to "any conveyance" by grantor—Betker v. Nailey, 140 F.2d 171, 78 U.S.App.D.C. 312.

Requirement of writing

A power to revoke a trust "by an instrument in writing" may not be exercised by an oral agreement.—In re Justice's Estate, 50 Pa.Dist. & Co. 532.

Withdrawal of policies from trustee's custody

Insurance trust agreement authorizing insured to withdraw any policy from custody of trustee at any time, and reciting that trust should be irrevocable, without reservation of interest in insured or his estate, was irrevocable only as to policies not withdrawn at time of his death, and hence withdrawal of policies from custody of trustee effected revocation of trust as to such policies—Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of U. S. v. Janssen, 187 A. 643, 14 N.J.Misc. 837.

only by pursuing the mode prescribed. While it has been said that a substantial compliance with the terms of the trust instrument is insufficient,³⁰ and that a reserved power of revocation must be strictly pursued,³¹ particularly where it is a matter of statutory requirement,³² a substantial compliance has been held sufficient.³³

When the mode prescribed is by deed, instruments lacking the essentials of a deed, such as a letter, are insufficient.³⁴ Where reservation is made to revoke the trust as an entirety, it may not be revoked in part.³⁵ An instrument revoking a trust is not a contract between the parties, but an act manifesting the intention to exercise the power reserved.³⁶ There is a stronger presumption against the revocation of a formal declaration of trust than against the revocation of a mere deposit in a savings bank in the name of the depositor as trustee for another.³⁷ Where an instrument of revocation is destroyed before it becomes effective, the interest of the beneficiaries is not divested.³⁸

Mere modification of a trust does not constitute an exercise of a reserved power to revoke it.³⁹

Method not specified. When no particular method is specified, the revocation may be made by any act or conveyance sufficient to terminate the trust,⁴⁰ or in any manner sufficiently manifesting the settlor's intention to revoke the trust.⁴¹ On the other hand, a trust is not revoked by acts or conveyances consistent with its continued existence.⁴² A trust has been held revoked by the creator on the execution of a mortgage on the trust property,⁴³ notwithstanding no reference in terms is made to the reserved power.⁴⁴ Where a settlor retains a power of revocation by reserving a power of sale over the real estate which is the subject of the trust, as discussed supra § 89, a conveyance of the realty by warranty deed operates as a revocation of the trust;⁴⁵ and where a settlor retains the power to sell certain property subject to a trust, and later conveys the property to someone else, the conveyance itself is an implied revocation of the trust, since the trustee and the cestui que trust are divested of all interest in the property.⁴⁶

Partial revocation at different times. The settlor of a revocable trust is not required to exercise the full power of revocation at one time,⁴⁷ but may validly exercise the power with respect to one part of the trust estate at one time and with respect to other parts at other times.⁴⁸

Formality of instrument; seal; recording. An instrument of revocation is ineffective unless executed by all of the parties required by the trust instrument.⁴⁹ Where a trust is created by a formal deed, the instrument revoking it should be, if not of equal solemnity, at least of undoubted authenticity.⁵⁰ Where a seal on a trust instrument is unnecessary and adds nothing to its legal effect, the instrument of revocation need not bear a seal.⁵¹ The requirement of an acknowledgment of the revoking instrument is not wholly for the benefit of the trustees,⁵² and, therefore, cannot be waived by them.⁵³ Where required by statute, if the instrument creating a voluntary trust is recorded, the deed of revocation must also be recorded.⁵⁴

Delivery of the instrument of revocation is not essential,⁵⁵ unless required by the trust instrument.⁵⁶

Notice to trustee. While a settlor ordinarily manifests his intention to revoke by communicating his decision to the trustee,⁵⁷ it is not absolutely necessary that the trustee should receive such a communication,⁵⁸ unless such notice is required by the terms of the trust instrument;⁵⁹ but it has been held that a provision for written notice to the trustee, being solely designed for his benefit, may be waived by him,⁶⁰ with resulting valid revocation,⁶¹ at least in the absence of a dishonest or improper motive.⁶²

Consent of parties. Where the trust instrument provides that it shall be irrevocable without the consent of the trustee and all beneficiaries named, it is essential that all parties to the trust be properly before the court before it can assume jurisdiction to dissolve the trust.⁶³ On the other hand, it has been held that a power of revocation expressly reserved in a trust agreement which is a voluntary trust without consideration may be exercised by the settlor against the beneficiaries named in the trust

Delivery to trustee

(1) Generally.—Union Trust Co. v. Watson, supra.

(2) Under a provision that the settlor may revoke at any time during his life by an instrument in writing signed and acknowledged and delivered to the trustee, the mailing of a letter of revocation by the settlor is a sufficient delivery although it was not received until after the settlor's death.—Hackley Union Nat. Bank v. Farmer, 234 N.W. 135, 252 Mich. 674.

57. Md.—Hoffa v. Hough, 30 A.2d 761, 181 Md. 472.

Notice of effective revocation date

Where insured informed bank named as trustee in insurance trust agreement and as beneficiary in life policies that he was exercising right to revoke agreement with bank and that bank would be notified of effective revocation date, and bank's president wrote to insured stating that bank understood that trust relationship was severed, insured was not required to give bank any further notice of effective revocation date, and bank was estopped to assert that agreement was not properly revoked.—Goldberg v. Hudson County Nat. Bank, 197 A. 20, 123 N.J.Eq. 269.

Pa.—In re Lyon's Estate, 63 A.2d 415, 164 Pa.Super. 140.

More intention to revoke, not communicated to trustee, is insufficient where notice is required.—Gall v. Union Nat. Bank of Little Rock, 159 S.W.2d 757, 203 Ark. 1000.

More existence of copy of trust agreement, although altered by trustor himself, did not amount to notice to trustee in writing so as to effect revocation.—Security Trust Co. v. Spruance, 174 A. 285, 20 Del.Ch. 195.

Notice by subsequent agreement

Later trust agreement, into which trustee entered, was held effective notwithstanding it contained no express revocation of prior agreement, where later agreement dealt with same res and agreements could not operate in any degree except as prior one was revoked, clear intent to revoke was, therefore, revealed to trustee in writing by later agreement.—Security Trust Co. v. Spruance, supra.

agreement, without their consent.⁶⁴ If a settlor reserves the power to revoke the trust only with the consent of the trustee, he cannot revoke it without such consent;⁶⁵ likewise, if he reserves power to revoke only with the consent of a third person, he cannot revoke without such consent.⁶⁶

Approval of judge. A provision, in a trust created by a settlor for his sole benefit, that it can be revoked by him with the written approval of a judge, is solely for the benefit of the trustee and may be waived by him.⁶⁷

Where a mode of revocation other than by will is specified, revocation cannot be by will. Some authorities so hold even where no mode is specified; but others apparently recognize revocation by will.

Where a mode of revocation other than by will is specified, in the trust instrument, the trustor has no power to revoke the trust by will.⁶⁸ A provision for the exercise of the power by filing a written notice with the trustee shows the settlor's intention that the power be exercised only during his lifetime, so as to foreclose its exercise by will.⁶⁹ Where no particular mode of revocation is specified, it has been held that a trust cannot be revoked by a will,⁷⁰ as the right of revocation must be exercised during the life of the settlor;⁷¹ and a power to revoke "during the lifetime" of the settlor has been held to mean a revocation taking effect before the death of the settlor,⁷² so that the power cannot be exercised by a will.⁷³ At any rate, whether a trust is revoked by the grantor's will is a matter of what the grantor intended by the will.⁷⁴ Revocation by a will is not accomplished where the will is not inconsistent with the trust,⁷⁵ or where it recognizes the existence and efficacy of the trust;⁷⁶ and a provision limiting the right to revoke to a proper instrument in writing executed by the settlor and lodged with the trustee is not complied with by lodging with the trustee a certified copy of the settlor's probated will.⁷⁷ By reference in a will to "my estate," the testator does not intend to refer to a trust estate over which he retains a power of revocation.⁷⁸

A residuary clause in a will bequeathing a legacy to a trust beneficiary without an express revocation of the trust does not necessarily revoke the trust;⁷⁹

and where a settlor retains the testamentary power to revoke the trust indenture, a general residuary clause in his will, disposing of all the residue of the property of the settlor or all the property for which he has a power of appointment, is not an exercise of the power of revocation.⁸⁰

Inapplicable statute. Statutes dealing with formalities which must be followed in executing any power, either inter vivos or testamentary, have been held not applicable to the revocation of a trust by the settlor's last will and testament.⁸¹

9. DURATION AND TERMINATION

§ 92. In General

Subject to any existing statutory restrictions, the creator of a trust may specifically prescribe the duration of a trust. In the absence of an express provision with respect to its duration, a trust will continue as long as may be necessary to accomplish the purposes for which it was created.

Subject to any existing statutory restrictions,⁸²

the creator of a trust may specifically prescribe the duration of the trust.⁸³ Generally, a trust continues to the time fixed by its own terms,⁸⁴ and will ordinarily continue for the time stipulated,⁸⁵ and terminate on the expiration of such period.⁸⁶ A trust may be made to determine on the happening of a certain event or contingency,⁸⁷ and will terminate on the happening of the event or contingency.⁸⁸

Extensions

(1) Where property is placed in trustees' hands for a specified period, courts are careful not to permit extension of trustees' control thereof beyond such period.—Friedberg v. Schultz, 38 N.E.2d 182, 312 Ill.App. 171.

(2) Persons who are free to contract have the right to grant to trustees the power to extend a trust in whatever manner and on whatever conditions such persons may designate.—Morris v. The Broadway, 65 N.E.2d 605, 328 Ill.App. 267.

(3) Where amendment of trust agreement merely provided means whereby stock might be distributed when trust assets were disposed of as provided in trust agreement, amendment did not have effect of illegally extending termination date of trust.—Sarasin v. Live Stock Nat. Bank of Chicago, 105 N.E.2d 752, 412 Ill. 88.

(4) Where trust agreement fixed a termination date but before such date donor and trustees and beneficiaries executed an agreement of continuance, a bare possibility with respect to adverse effect on right of grandchildren of donor or anyone claiming an interest in estate of such grandchild, which had not occurred and could not now occur, was insufficient ground on which to hold invalid the agreement of the parties continuing the trust.—Linahan v. Linahan, 39 A.2d 895, 131 Conn. 307.

Contractual right to continuation

Under agreement between surety on city contracts and the city, whereby surety as required by city ordinance deposited securities with trust company, which had active duties, including the duty to hold securities as long as city held bonds for outstanding obligations of surety and until city solicitor should consent to return of securities, city had contractual right to continuation of trust as long as any obligations for which the surety bonds were executed were outstanding, and the right could not be impaired by court of equity.—City of Philadelphia v. Lieberman, C.C.A. Pa., 112 F.2d 424, certiorari denied Lieberman v. City of Philadelphia, 61 S.Ct. 48, 311 U.S. 679, 85 L.Ed. 438.

Trusts created for a definite period of years are valid,⁸⁹ and the mere possibility that at some future time the futility of continuing the trust or some other reason might require its termination does not make the trust void from the beginning or ineffective.⁹⁰ Courts of equity will not permit trustees to extend the life of a trust unless they are authorized to do so.⁹¹ A trust relationship may be terminated by operation of law.⁹² Where the relationship of trustee is established, and there is no showing of its termination, it persists.⁹³ A trust created by a court of general jurisdiction, the decree of which remains unversed and unmodified, is by virtue of that decree still in existence.⁹⁴

It is not necessary to the validity of a trust that the trust agreement have a prescribed duration.⁹⁵ The duration of a trust is, in the absence of provision, dependent on its purpose,⁹⁶ and not by the technical form of the words creating it,⁹⁷ and it will continue as long as may be necessary to accomplish the purposes for which it was created.⁹⁸ A trust cannot be destroyed for any purpose other than the purpose of the trust.⁹⁹ The trust will continue as long as is necessary to preserve and protect the estate itself,¹ or to protect the interests of contingent remaindermen.²

On the other hand, no trust can survive the purpose of its creation;³ and, regardless of the nominal duration of the trust,⁴ it will not continue in equity any longer than the thing sought to be secured by the trust demands.⁵ Consequently, the trust will terminate as soon as it has been fully performed or executed,⁶ when its purpose has been accomplished,⁷ when its purpose has been accomplished and the entire ownership of its corpus vested,⁸ or when the object of the trust fails or its execution becomes impossible.⁹ A trust will terminate, sometimes by reason of statute, when the necessity for the trust

Act of beneficiary

(1) When purpose becomes wholly unattainable, power in trust ceases, and this is so although purpose is defeated by voluntary act of person for whose benefit power was created.—Brooklyn Trust Co. v. Lester, 267 N.Y.S. 827, 239 App.Div. 422.

or the purpose for which it was created has ceased.¹⁰ Although there is authority to the contrary,¹¹ as soon as rights in property held for accumulation become vested, the direction to accumulate becomes destructible,¹² and this is true even of property held in a charitable trust.¹³

A trust is at an end when the trustee has finally accounted, has conveyed the property to the persons entitled to it, and has been discharged;¹⁴ a trust has terminated where the requirements as to income have been carried out and all that remains to be done is to distribute the principal to the remaindermen;¹⁵ and a trust terminates when the sole remaining beneficiary acquires a present right to the

corpus as well as to the entire income.¹⁶ If no time is limited in the trust instrument and any purpose remains to be subserved by a continuance of the trust, it will ordinarily continue until terminated by the act of the parties or by a court of competent jurisdiction.¹⁷

Intention as controlling. The duration of a trust depends largely on the intention of the creator as shown by a proper construction of the trust instrument and the nature and purposes of the trust.¹⁸ The settlor's intention is paramount to the wish of the beneficiary.¹⁹ It is proper for the court to construe a trust on the question of its duration where the question is doubtful.²⁰

(2) Parties who abandoned and relinquished in favor of another arrangement powers in trust that might have been exercised in their behalf were estopped to assert rights which were once enforceable but had long remained dormant.—Brooklyn Trust Co. v. Lester, 267 N.Y.S. 827, 239 App. Div. 422.

Temporary impossibility of performance

Under a trust created by citizen to arrange and carry out a compromise with German creditors, where war supervened, in an action by trustor to recover trust fund, the trust was not terminated, although temporarily impossible of performance, but merely was suspended, and trustor was not entitled to recover the trust fund.—*Vorhaus v. Dry trust

Where only purpose of a trusteeship of accumulated funds set aside by defendant employer was to protect the defendant to extent of defendant's interest in seeing that plaintiff employee had a new automobile when needed to be used in the service of the defendant, the trust became a dry trust when plaintiff permanently left the employment and plaintiff was entitled to the money.—*Fleetwood v. Beyond control of beneficiary

Where trust is established with object of placing trust property beyond control of beneficiary, effect may be given to this intention and termination of trust denied, although all persons who have interest in trust on its termination are in being and sui juris and assign their interest to sole life beneficiary, or otherwise consent to termination of trust, and this rule applies even though there is no spendthrift provision in trust.—In re Easterday's Estate, 114 P.2d 669, 45 Cal. (2) When only provision for duration of trust is that it terminate at time when designated person attains specified age, such provision should be construed to mean that trust was to continue only until that person reaches such age, or only until his prior death, and that trust terminates on event that happens first.—In re Fishberg's Will, 285 N.Y.S. 303, 158 Misc. 3.

(3) Where assets of failing corporation were conveyed to president in trust, provision that trusteeship should expire six years from date of acceptance was directory, so that suit to quiet title could be maintained by president where all property had not been sold within such period.—Williams v. Morris, 25 P.2d 135, 144 Or. 620.

(4) Trust, created when money was given to bank to pay interest at such rate to named persons in trust for prison band, was not terminated by

Discretionary power of trustee. A trust is not rendered invalid because it gives the trustee discretion either to continue or to terminate it at an appointed time or under certain contingencies.²¹ The court will not hesitate to give directions when the discretion is being unreasonably exercised,²² since the discretion is not arbitrary but must be exercised reasonably and in the interest of the cestui que trust,²³ and subject to any limitations or restrictions contained in the trust instrument.²⁴ The trust continues until terminated by the trustee in the exercise of his discretion.²⁵ The fact that the discretion is personal and cannot be exercised by a successor of the original trustee does not terminate a trust which is to continue for the life of the beneficiary unless sooner terminated by the trustee in the exercise of the discretion conferred.²⁶ Where a trust provides that it may be terminated by the trustee by written notice to the beneficiaries and delivery to them of the corpus of the trust estate, the trust is effectually ended by such notice without delivery of the corpus where delivery is waived.²⁷ When a notice of termination misdescribes the trust agreement it may, under general rules, be corrected in equity.²⁸ An unrestricted power to amend a trust given to the trustees includes the power to make an amendment giving one trustee the right to terminate a trust by notice in writing to the other trustee.²⁹

Lapse of time. As long as an express trust exists and is recognized by the trustee it never becomes stale.³⁰ Under some circumstances lapse of time may create a presumption that a trust has been terminated,³¹ but such presumption may be rebutted.³² An unexecuted trust will not terminate be-failure of bank.—Conley v. Johnson, 54 P.2d 585, 101 Mont. 376.

(5) Where bank went out of existence before president and secretary thereof executed purported deed of bank, conveying lots theretofore conveyed to bank in trust for deceased former owners' estates or their heirs, such deed conveyed no title, since trust failed or died when trustee ceased to exist.—Shumway v. Earley, 106 P.2d 194, 56 Ariz. 124.

(6) A trust, created by agreement authorizing trustee to terminate lease of trust realty or take such other action with respect to lease as trustee deemed advisable on lessee's default and to exercise all of lessor's rights, remedies, powers, and privileges and waive defaults, was not terminated by extinguishment of corporate lessee on theory that trust was to exist only as long as there was a lessee paying rent.—Wechter v. Chicago Title & Trust Co., 52 N.E.2d 157, 385 Ill. 111.

(7) Where realty acquired on foreclosure by bondholders was conveyed in trust for purpose of retiring certificates of beneficial interest, and trustee was directed to advertise realty for sale at public auction if it was not sold within five year period, and trust instrument gave beneficiaries right to postpone sale for further period, and authorized removal of trustee if he failed to perform his duties, fact that trustee did not advertise realty for sale at expiration of five-year period did not terminate trust.—Yedor v. Chicago City Bank & Trust Co., 44 N.E.2d 604, 380 Ill. 585.—Aitchuler v. Chicago City Bank & Trust Co., 43 N.E.2d 673, 380 Ill. 137.

(8) Where there was nothing in trust instrument which showed that its purpose was to provide support for the children of the grantors only during their minority or that the property should revert to the creators of the trust when the minors reached maturity, the trust property should be equally divided between the children when the younger attained legal age.—Ball v. Surety on city contracts

Where surety on city contracts deposited securities in trust to secure city from loss it might sustain because of surety's failure to fulfill its obligation to indemnify city for loss from claims and liability resulting from any cause during prosecution of work covered by contracts, ancillary receivers of surety were not entitled to release of the securities on ground that any action by the city was barred by lapse of time after completion of work under the contracts, in view of fact that limitation did not begin to run at completion of work, but only on breach of covenant to indemnify which, under Pennsylvania law, could not be earlier than date claim should be made against the city, and ancillary receivers were not entitled to release of securities on ground that more than six months had expired following completion of last contract on which surety was the surety, and Pennsylvania statute required any negligence claims against city to be filed within six months from date of origin of claim, since date of origin would be date cause of action accrues, which, under Pennsylvania law, would not occur until damage was sustained.—City of Philadelphia v. Lieberman, C. C.A.Pa., 112 F.2d 424, certiorari denied Lieberman v. City of Philadelphia, 61 S.Ct. 48, 311 U.S. 679, 85 L. Ed. 438.

cause of a delay on the part of the trustee in executing it,³³ notwithstanding the trust instrument directs its execution within a certain time.³⁴

Trusts for married women. Under general rules, ordinarily, a trust for the separate use of a married woman and intended to protect the property from her husband will terminate according to the creator's intention on a dissolution of the coverture.³⁵ Thus, the trust will terminate on the death of either the husband³⁶ or the wife,³⁷ or on a divorce.³⁸ However, the trust will not end on the dissolution of coverture where the language of the trust indicates that the trust is to continue for a longer period.³⁹ Whether a sole and separate use trust may be terminated by an absolute divorce on the theory that such a discovery is equivalent to the death of the husband depends entirely on the language of the instrument creating such a trust.⁴⁰ A trust for a wife during her husband's lifetime is not terminated by a divorce and remarriage of the husband.⁴¹ Unless a contrary intention appears, a trust in favor of a married woman for her separate use will terminate on discovery notwithstanding the possibility of another marriage⁴² and will terminate notwithstanding a second marriage.⁴³

Trusts for minors. Where a trust is created for the benefit of an infant during minority, it will continue during minority⁴⁴ and ordinarily will terminate according to the creator's intention when the infant becomes of age,⁴⁵ unless it is apparent from the terms of the trust instrument that a longer duration is contemplated.⁴⁶ Where the trust is to continue during minority or until marriage, it terminates on the beneficiary's marriage.⁴⁷ A trust which is contingent on the arrival of the beneficiaries at their majority fails by the death of the beneficiaries before reaching their majority.⁴⁸

While it has been held that on the removal of the disability of infancy by marriage a trust terminates,⁴⁹ it has also been held that the removal of the disability by a decree of court in pursuance of statute does not end the trust.⁵⁰ The possibility of issue never becomes extinct during the lifetime of any parent for whose children, born or to be born, a trust is created.⁵¹

Courts of equity, in the exercise of their supervisory power, may terminate an express trust.

Although it has been held that the court has no power to extinguish a trust in whole or in part,⁵² courts of equity in the exercise of their supervisory power may, in a proper case, before the expiration of the term for which an express trust is created,⁵³ terminate it;⁵⁴ but exceptional circumstances must exist.⁵⁵ It is only when all the parties in interest are before the court, as discussed infra subdivision d, when each is sui juris,⁵⁶ and all join in the application⁵⁷ that a court of equity ever terminates a trust. Even when all these circumstances exist, equity does not do so by force of the application, but only when a decree is proper.⁵⁸ When such circumstances exist power is in the court of equity, but with the power is not necessarily imposed the duty to exercise it.⁵⁹ It is still discretionary,⁶⁰ but the court may not arbitrarily deny the termination of a trust.⁶¹

The court will be careful not to defeat any object of the creator apparent from his declaration of the purposes of the trust,⁶² and no fair and lawful restriction imposed by the settlor will be nullified or disturbed by such termination.⁶³ Where the trustee is given discretionary power to terminate the trust at an appointed time or on certain contingencies, the court may terminate the trust where the trustee unjustifiably refuses to convey the property to the beneficiary.⁶⁴ Where discretion as to the amount of the income to be devoted to the needs of the beneficiary is vested in the trustee,⁶⁵ or where the effect of the trust is to direct accumulations of the income until a fixed time,⁶⁶ the trust cannot be terminated by the court during the period fixed by the settlor,

Dereliction of trustee

(1) Dereliction of trustee in duty as trustee is not a reason for termination of trust and would only call for a more faithful trustee—Knecht v. George, App., 69 N.E.2d 228, appeal dismissed 53 N.E.2d 647, 142 Ohio St. 635.

(2) Improper investment policies and abuse of powers by trustee are not grounds for termination of trust—Wogman v. Wells Fargo Bank & Union Trust Co., Ohio App., 267 P.2d 423.

(3) Other decisions with respect to derelictions of trustees see 65 C.J. p 353 note 47 [b].

Same grounds as conveyance not in trust

Trust instrument can be terminated on any ground on which a conveyance not in trust can be set aside, such as fraud, duress, undue influence, breach of duty in confidential relationship or mistake—Liberty Trust Co. v. Weber, 90 A.2d 194, 200 Md. 491, modified on other grounds 91 A.2d 393, 200 Md. 491.

An orphan's court does not have jurisdiction, under statute, to terminate a trust, where the instrument of conveyance created essentially, rather than a trust, an agency relationship—Petition of Sullivan, 34 Pa. Dist. & Co. 154.

55. Pa—In re McCreary's Estate, 52 Pa. Dist. & Co. 461, affirmed McCreary's Estate v. Pitts, 47 A.2d 235, 354 Pa. 347.

Few exceptions

Courts have no power, with a few exceptions, to dissolve a trust before term for which it was created—Gibson v. Gibson, 106 N.E.2d 102, 122 Ind.App. 559.

Strict construction of statute

Insofar as statute permitting court under certain conditions to authorize termination of a trust having a vested remainder to a charitable, literary, scientific, or religious body is in derogation of the common law, it must be strictly construed to effect only so much change in prior law as is necessarily required, and such statute does not authorize court to terminate a spendthrift trust with remainder to scientific and charitable purposes—In re Harrison's Estate, 185 A.766, 322 Pa. 532.

Payments from wrong funds

Where trust provided that life beneficiary was to be paid out of the trust proceeds but trustees, with full knowledge of life beneficiary, made the weekly payments from funds of a corporation, which was owned by the trust, the fact that the payments came from corporate funds rather than proceeds from the trust was not sufficient reason for terminating the trust—Markus v. Markus, Mass., 119 N.E.2d 415.

Subsequent attack

Where express terms of instrument creating trust gave trustee and court authority to pay, convey, or deliver to beneficiary any part or whole of trust property or proceeds from sale thereof when court should, after independent investigation, be satisfied that beneficiary would make profitable use thereof, termination of the trust by court was not subject to subsequent attack by beneficiary, where all persons beneficially interested in trust property had joined in petition for its termination, and were sui juris—Ridgeway v. Woodward, 78 F.2d 878, 64 App.D.C. 399, certiorari denied 56 S.Ct. 146, 296 U.S. 575, 80 L.Ed. 407.

even where all the beneficiaries are sui juris and consent thereto.⁶⁷ The court may terminate a trust where it is for the best interest of the sole beneficiary as settlor.⁶⁸ Termination of the trust must be advantageous to the beneficiaries.⁶⁹

When a trust is impossible of fulfillment the court will terminate it and have the property distributed.⁷⁰ A judicial sale of the trust property under an encumbrance, which was made prior to the creation of the trust, renders the trust impossible of accomplishment.⁷¹ A trust will be terminated where its purposes become illegal,⁷² as well as where its continuance becomes peculiarly profitless, expensive, or hopeless.⁷³ Where the accomplishment of the purposes of a trust if continued, would be impaired substantially by circumstances not known or anticipated by the settlor, the trust will be terminated.⁷⁴

Partial termination. Prior to the expiration of the term for which a trust is created the court may, in a proper case, terminate a trust as to a part only if the beneficiary desires it.⁷⁵ Where the purpose of a trust in part of the trust estate is accomplished, it will not be continued merely because it would be more advantageous to the beneficiary of the other part that the property be kept together and administered as a whole.⁷⁶

Benefit to trustee. A trust will not be continued merely for the benefit of the trustee, or in order that he may continue to receive compensation.⁷⁷

Remainder interests

Where spendthrift trust instrument provided that settlor was to receive income for life and that, on the death of the settlor, all residue of the trust should be distributed and delivered to the heirs at law of the settlor in accordance with the laws of succession of the state then in effect, instrument created no remainder interests in the settlor's heirs at law, and settlor had right to have the trust terminated.—Bixby v. b. Purposes of Trust Accomplished

Equity will decree the termination of a trust prior to expiration of its term when all the objects and purposes of the trust have been accomplished.

Where all the beneficiaries of a trust are sui juris and consent, equity will decree the termination of a trust prior to expiration of its term when all the objects and purposes of the trust have been accomplished and the interests have all vested,⁷⁸ or when all the objects and purposes of the trust which are inconsistent with the full beneficial ownership and control of the cestui are fulfilled.⁷⁹ Equity will terminate the trust where the necessity for the trust or the purpose for which it was created has ceased or failed;⁸⁰ but if it does not appear what was the reason or purpose of its creation, the court may not terminate the trust on the ground that the reason no longer exists.⁸¹ The court may terminate a trust where legal⁸² or mental and physical⁸³ disability which prompted the trust is removed. The court may terminate a trust where a state of affairs arises which the settlor did not contemplate or provide for in the trust instrument, rendering the trust no longer necessary.⁸⁴ The court may terminate a trust where the entire beneficial interest vests in one of several beneficiaries⁸⁵ as where the remaindermen release their interest to the life tenant⁸⁶ or the remainderman acquires the entire beneficial interest.⁸⁷ The fact that the interest of one beneficiary has been assigned does not make it the duty of the court to decree a termination.⁸⁸

c. Purposes of Trust Not Accomplished

Where all its purposes have not been accomplished, the court will ordinarily refuse to terminate a trust.

Although a trust may not have ceased by the expiration of time⁸⁹ and although all its purposes may not have been accomplished, if all the parties who are or who may be interested in the trust property are in existence and are sui juris, equity may decree the termination of the trust,⁹⁰ but notwithstanding the beneficiaries of the trust are competent and consent or seek termination,⁹¹ where the trust is active and not impossible of fulfillment, the court will ordinarily refuse to terminate it.⁹² The fact that the trustee is given discretion to determine the nature of the investments to be made under the trust does not preclude a decree of termination.⁹³

Equity will not ordinarily terminate a spendthrift trust which is not impossible of fulfillment,⁹⁴ at least where it does not appear that the conditions have arisen under which the trust may be terminated.⁹⁵ However, if all interested parties are in existence and sui juris, and consent thereto, a court of equity may decree the termination of such a trust,⁹⁶ and where the reasons for placing property in a spendthrift trust have ceased to exist, the trust may be annulled as provided by statute at the instance of the beneficiary,⁹⁷ unless other beneficiaries fail to consent.⁹⁸ The partial or total invalidity of spendthrift trust provisions in a trust is no reason for terminating the trust.⁹⁹

d. Consent of Parties

Equity will not decree the termination of a trust where some of the trust beneficiaries do not or cannot consent to its termination.

Notwithstanding the reason for the trust has ceased and its purpose has been fulfilled,¹ equity will not decree its termination where some of the trust beneficiaries do not or cannot consent to its termination,² but may decree its termination where all the

Representation

(1) Where husband and wife conveyed realty in trust for wife for life beneficiaries or interested persons are competent and consent or desire its termination.³ As long as it remains uncertain who are the parties in interest, the trust cannot be terminated.⁴ Equity will not terminate a trust under which after-born children may take an interest.⁵ It has been held, however, that where a woman is the sole life tenant and also, in the absence of issue, the sole remainderman, the trust will be terminated where the testimony establishes that it is physically impossible for her to bear children.⁶ Where the guardian of a minor is authorized by the court to consent to a dissolution of a trust, the dissolution of the trust is not prevented merely because of the minority of the child.⁷

Consent of trustee. The consent of the trustee to the termination of a trust has been held both necessary⁸ and unnecessary.⁹ A trustee without interest in the trust except a claim for services on the continuance of the trust has no standing in court to dispute the application of all the beneficiaries for a dissolution of the trust.¹⁰ with remainder to issue of marriage and with reverter to husband if wife should die without heirs, and three children of parties reached age of twenty-one years, and parties were divorced and had remarried third persons, and various suits were instituted to sell realty to foreclose liens, and the three children asked that trust be terminated and that proceeds of decedent sale be distributed among them, and parties ratified decedent sale of realty and waived any right to participate in residue of proceeds of sale, any unborn children of the parties were before court by virtual representation, and purchaser at decedent sale received good title to realty.—*Interstate Bond Co. v. Failure to answer or appear

Consent of interested parties, not answering, and not represented, to judgment decreeing dissolution of trust sooner than was contemplated by testator and distributing assets, could not be implied by their failure to answer or appear, where complaint did not ask for change or modification of trust but only asked for construction of will and advice and instructions in administering trust therein established.—Wachovia Bank & Trust Co. v. Laws, 7 S.E.2d 470, 217 N.C. 171.

Equivalent to absolute fee

The persons whose consent is necessary must represent trust interests whose sum total is equivalent to an absolute fee, including all life tenants and remaindermen, whether their interest is vested or contingent, ascertained or unascertained, living or unborn, and the possible interest of beneficiaries is not removed by the fact that they are to take only in default of appointment by will.—*Collins v. Special purpose

A trustee cannot prevent termination of trust when all interested parties consent, unless there is some special purpose declared in the trust itself that requires its continuation. A trustee's interest in fees to be earned is not one which the law protects against the action of beneficiaries who desire to terminate the trust, and the mere showing that the trust, according to its terms, is active, is not sufficient to defeat the right of the beneficiaries to terminate it.—In re Musser's Estate, 17 A.2d 411, 341 Pa. 1.

e. Actions

Persons beneficially interested in a trust are necessary parties to a suit to terminate the trust.

Persons beneficially interested may maintain a suit to extinguish or terminate the trust,¹¹ and are considered to be necessary parties to such a suit.¹² Persons without interest are not necessary parties.¹³ Where certain beneficiaries allege that they have an equitable right in, and claim to, the subject matter, they may maintain an action for dissolution and ask equitable relief without the joinder of other beneficiaries.¹⁴ Heirs at law of alternative beneficiaries are not required to be parties to suits to terminate the trust before its purposes are fully accomplished, where the term "heirs at law" is used as words of limitation and not of purchase.¹⁵ A petition for citation on a trustee has been held to be the proper procedure for a beneficiary seeking termination of the trust where the trustee does not join in the proceedings.¹⁶ More than one trust may be terminated in the same action,¹⁷ and an action to terminate a trust acts in personam.¹⁸

In a suit to terminate a trust the bill, petition, or complaint must contain averments sufficient to entitle complainant to relief.¹⁹ Thus, the bill must sufficiently allege that the purpose for which the trust was created has been accomplished.²⁰ Under court rules, a demurrer to the petition may not be a proper pleading,²¹ although if such a demurrer alleges want of jurisdiction in the court, it will be treated as an answer challenging jurisdiction.²²

General rules relating to the weight and sufficiency of evidence in civil actions apply in suits to terminate an express trust.²³ It has been held that the testimony of medical witnesses that the physical condition of a woman prevents her from becoming a mother will not be received for the purpose of terminating a trust estate.²⁴

In a suit to terminate a trust in corporate stock, it has been held that the management of the corporation which is not a party to the suit will not be reviewed.²⁵ A trustee is not precluded by reason of a lack of interest in the subject matter from objecting to the termination of the trust on the ground that the age of the beneficiary does not preclude possibility of her giving birth to other bene-

Vested and contingent beneficiaries

Under agreement creating revocable trust for life of donor-beneficiary and on his death giving property to a minor child and four adult children, who were also the trustees, and giving any predeceased child's share to his children or their issue, etc., only the donor's children took vested interests, and hence donor, adult children, and minor's guardian were the only necessary parties to action to dissolve trust. Clear evidence

In suit by settlor to terminate trust, wherein trustee denied validity of trust declaration under which settlor claimed a right of revocation but asserted duties under another valid and irrevocable declaration signed by settlor where instrument under which settlor claimed was a fraudulent instrument unenforceable in equity, settlor was required to make it clearly appear that the declaration under which the trustee claimed was clearly invalid in order to entitle settlor to return of the trust res.—Albert v. Albert, 80 N.E.2d 69, 334 Ill.App. 440.

Settlor-beneficiary

In order to sustain settlor-beneficiary's bill to cancel trust, beneficiary must establish that all possible interests are before court in person of beneficiary and trust has no existing purpose to support it.—Rehr v. Fidelity-Philadelphia Trust Co., 165 A. 380, 310 Pa. 301, 91 A.L.R. 99.

ficiaries.²⁶ On termination of a trust the court may require the trustees before the court to convey to the beneficiaries trust property which is outside the territorial jurisdiction of the court and of which a decree could not divest them.²⁷ A decree of termination made in a proceeding in which the trustee was a party is binding on him.²⁸ Unless it affirmatively appears on the face of the judgment roll that the court lacked jurisdiction of the subject matter, a decree terminating a trust will not be set aside for lack of jurisdiction.²⁹ Those unsuccessfully seeking destruction of the trust agreement may have costs assessed against them.³⁰

§ 94. Termination by Death of Parties

- a. In general
- b. Beneficiaries

a. In General

Whether a trust terminates on the death of the settlor depends largely on the intention of the settlor as gathered from the terms of the trust instrument. Unless the trust so provides, a trust does not terminate by reason of the death of the trustee.

Trust as agency

(1) Where a purported trust is in fact a mere agency, such agency ceases at settlor's death—Bolles v. Toledo Trust Co., 58 N.E.2d 381, 144 Ohio St. 195, 157 A.L.R. 1164.

(2) Where trust agreement under which settlors conveyed their realty to trustee provided that on death of any settlor, payments should be made to person named to receive them by settlor's will, and in default thereof to certain others, and that trust might be altered, modified, or revoked by direction in writing signed by all settlors or persons owning equitable interest in the trust, it did not create mere relationship of agent and principal between trustee and settlors which terminated on death of a settlor, but legal title remained in trustee notwithstanding a settlor's death—Central Trust Co. v. McCarthy, 57 N.E.2d 126, 73 Ohio App. 431.

Where revocable trusts were subject to direction of court during incompetency of creator thereof, balance of trust accounts in event of incompetent's death would then become absolute property of infant beneficiary—Ganley v. Lincoln Sav Bank of Brooklyn, 13 N.Y.S.2d 571, 257 App.Div. 503.

Death of one of the parties to a trust does not in and of itself terminate the trust.³¹ Whether a trust terminates on the death of the settlor depends largely on the intention of the settlor as gathered from the terms of the trust instrument.³² The trust will continue after the settlor's death where there remain purposes unfulfilled,³³ and it has been stated that where a trust has been perfectly created, it is not terminable by the death of the party who created it.³⁴ A trust terminates on the settlor's death where, under the trust, he is the sole³⁵ or surviving³⁶ beneficiary. The settlor's death does not end a trust where a life beneficiary is still alive.³⁷ Where there is no duty imposed on a trustee other than to hold property for the heirs of the trustor, on the trustor's death it becomes the property of the heirs.³⁸ Under a trust created by a deposit in trust for the depositor and another, with the balance payable at the death of either to the survivor, on the death of either the trust ceases.³⁹

Designation or cessation of functioning

The trust created by trust indenture, granting named trustees and their survivors and successors rights and powers, to be exercised by them as trustees, for lifetime of last survivor, did not terminate on death, resignation, or cessation of functioning of last surviving named trustee.—Finch v. Edwards, 138 S.W.2d 665, 239 Mo.App. 788.

in view of the fact that the court may appoint new trustees, a trust does not terminate by reason of the death of the trustee⁴³ or of some of several trustees.⁴⁴ However, since powers involving personal confidence or discretion do not pass to succeeding trustees, as discussed infra § 259, the trust will terminate on the trustee's death where its execution is dependent on confidential or discretionary powers of the appointed trustee.⁴⁵

A trust will terminate on the death of a life tenant where the trust instrument expressly so provides.

Whether a trust terminates on the death of a beneficiary depends on the intent of the settlor as gathered from the trust instrument.⁴⁶ A trust will terminate on the death of a life tenant where the trust instrument expressly so provides,⁴⁷ or where a trust in favor of a life tenant is unencumbered with any remainder in trust and with no further purposes to be fulfilled.⁴⁸ A trust will terminate on the death of the ultimate beneficiary under the trust where no other purposes for its continuance exist.⁴⁹ Where a subsequent trust is void, the trust terminates on the life tenant's death.⁵⁰ The fact that in a trust for a life tenant with remainder absolutely to children the children are minors at the death of the life tenant does not continue the trust until they are of age.⁵¹

The death of the life tenant, however, does not terminate the trust as long as there are active duties to be performed by the trustee.⁵² A trust is not terminated by the death of a life tenant where a use after the death inures to the benefit of the tenant's children,⁵³ or a division of the property by the trustee is essential,⁵⁴ or where other active duties under the trust devolve on the trustee.⁵⁵ Where a remainder after a life estate is devised in trust for a person living at the death of the testator, and the equitable interest thereby created is vested, the death of the cestui prior to the termination of the life estate does not defeat the trust.⁵⁶ A trust for the benefit of a life tenant after the expiration of a life estate in the property fails where the owner of the life estate survives the life tenant.⁵⁷ A conveyance in trust for a beneficiary after the decease of his parents fails where the beneficiary dies before the parents.⁵⁸

On the death of a beneficiary, the trust may terminate in part in accordance with the terms of the trust instrument.⁵⁹ A trust for the benefit of two persons during their natural lives and on the death of either the trustee to convey to such decedent's children terminates only as to the deceased beneficiary's share in the trust.⁶⁰

Deposit of money in bank. On the death of the beneficiary before the depositor the trust terminates,⁶¹ unless before the beneficiary's death the depositor indicates an intention to make the tentative trust absolute and irrevocable.⁶² Where an absolute or irrevocable trust is created, the death of the beneficiary before the depositor does not terminate the trust.⁶³

§ 95. Termination by Acts, Agreements, and Conveyances

Generally, trusts are terminable by the consent or agreement of all the parties in interest.

As a general rule, trusts are terminable by the consent or agreement of all the parties in interest.⁶⁴ It is the duty of the court, however, not to allow the parties to destroy a trust;⁶⁵ and trusts will not be terminated by agreement of the parties or beneficiaries except in cases where the design and object of the trust have been practically accomplished and all interests created have become vested.⁶⁶ Under the terms of the trust instrument the settlor may be granted⁶⁷ or denied the right to terminate the

Beneficiaries with power of appointment

(1) Where the life tenants of a spendthrift testamentary trust have a general power of appointment over the corpus, they are the sole parties in interest in the trust within the meaning of the rule that a trust may be terminated, under certain conditions, where all parties in interest agree—In re Wormser's Estate, 85 Pa. Dist. & Co. 526, 3 Fiduciary 489, 54 Lack. Jur. 201.

(2) Where life beneficiary of testamentary trust exercised in her will her power of appointment under the trust, beneficiary's husband, whose remainder interest was contingent on failure of beneficiary to exercise her power of appointment, became a stranger to the estate at time of beneficiary's death, and relationship between husband and trustee, as beneficiary and trustee under trust, was terminated—Kenny v. Citizens Nat. Trust & Sav. Bank of Los Angeles, Cal. App., 269 P.2d 641.

Donor and sole beneficiary may by mutual consent terminate a trust.—C. I. R. v. Bacher, C.C.A., 102 F.2d 500.

Omission of power to revoke

(1) The mere omission from a deed of trust of power to revoke does not generally prevent a termination of trust agreement if all parties who are or may be interested in trust property are in existence and are sui juris, and consent and agree to termination.—In re Donnan's Trust, 13 A.2d 55, 339 Pa. 43.

(2) The requisite consent by "all who are or may be interested," necessary to terminate a trust, not containing a power of revocation and not having terminated by expiration of time, means that their combined interests must be equivalent to an absolute title which cannot be defeated or divested by happening of any future event.—In re Donnan's Trust, supra.

Family-settlement rule

(1) The general family-settlement rule will not be applied where the result would be to permit the determination of a trust in a manner not authorized by law.—Altmeier v. Harris, 86 N.E.2d 229, 403 Ill. 345.

(2) Where trust which was sought to be annulled was an active trust wherein special duties were imposed on trustee, including disbursements of income from trust estate for an indefinite time to indefinite recipients on indefinite contingencies, the family settlement doctrine was not applicable.—Duffy v. Duffy, 20 S.E.2d 835, 221 N.C. 521.

Acts held not to show termination

Where divorced husband deposited sum with court to be paid to wife for care of parties' children and thereafter on parties' joint petition divorce decree was vacated and sum returned but parties did not ask for a restoration of status quo ante as to property settlement, but for release of trust fund and there was no provision for restoration of wife's property rights, surrendered under settlement or for a return of transfers made to her, course of action did not in itself signify a termination of trust established by parties.—Stretch v. Watson, 74 A.2d 597, 5 N.J. 268.

Laches or estoppel

Settlor was not barred by laches or estoppel from asserting right to termination of trust in accordance with provision in indenture by fact trust,⁶⁸ and the trustee⁶⁹ or beneficiary⁷⁰ may be granted the right to terminate the trust. Where the exercise of the power of termination is made dependent on the acquiescence of a trustee other than the settlor himself, the procurement of such acquiescence is necessary to enable the settlor to act.⁷¹ The withdrawal and pledging of certain trust property by the settlor does not terminate a trust otherwise complete.⁷² The underlying legal estate essential to a trust is not annulled by the loss of the deed which conveyed it,⁷³ or by withholding such deed from record,⁷⁴ or by both combined.⁷⁵

In the absence of statutory prohibition or restrictions on alienation contained in the trust instrument, where the beneficiaries are all competent to act and the trust estate is subject to no future contingencies and the beneficiaries have an absolute right to the trust estate, the trust may be terminated by the consent or agreement of all the beneficiaries⁷⁶

and without the consent of a court of equity.⁷⁷ This, however, may not be done against the objection of some of the beneficiaries,⁷⁸ or where there are contingent interests which are not determinable until the happening of a certain event,⁷⁹ or where there is an active⁸⁰ or spendthrift⁸¹ trust. Where the trust is passive, a sole beneficiary may terminate it at any time.⁸² Where there is a dry trust without a fixed period of duration, it may be terminated at any time by the beneficial owner creating it.⁸³ Where there is a mere naked trust with the legal and equitable title in the same person, such person may terminate the trust at any time.⁸⁴

A release by the remainder man to the life tenant will terminate a trust where the principal object of the trust is to preserve the corpus of the estate to the remainderman,⁸⁵ although it has been held that such a release does not in itself terminate the trust, but the court may terminate it.⁸⁶ Similarly, a release or disclaimer of the interest of the life tenant that right was not asserted for ten years and until after trustee because of changed conditions had refused to loan money to trustor as provided by indenture, where no intervening rights had accrued—Chase Nat. Bank of New York City v. Reinicke, 10 N. Y.S.2d 420.

to the remainderman terminates the trust.⁸⁷ A trust may be terminated by the failure of the beneficiaries, within a reasonable time, to perform a contract obligation.⁸⁸ A beneficiary is not entitled to have the trust terminated until judgments against the trustee in his trust capacity are paid.⁸⁹ Where the equitable title of a beneficiary is provable only by parol evidence, parol evidence is admissible to show a relinquishment of the trust.⁹⁰ If, by the terms of a spendthrift trust, the interest of the beneficiary is inalienable, such beneficiary cannot, after having accepted the trust, terminate it by releasing his interest therein.⁹¹ Where the income beneficiary of a spendthrift trust has accepted the gift and enjoyed it for many years, the refusal by the beneficiary to receive the income does not enable the remainderman to terminate the trust,⁹² and the beneficiary of a spendthrift trust can at any time revoke a release and disclaimer of a portion of the net income thereof and receive future income.⁹³ Under a statute prohibiting the alienation of the interest of a beneficiary, the trust may not be terminated by the alienation of the income from real or personal property.⁹⁴ Where the trust can be performed only with respect to a named beneficiary, it is defeated when another becomes possessed of the beneficiary's rights.⁹⁵ A trust in favor of a beneficiary determinable on a voluntary or involuntary conveyance, attachment, or levy is destroyed insofar as such beneficiary is concerned when such contingencies arise.⁹⁶ Where a trust for the benefit of certain beneficiaries and their legal representatives authorized a sale of the property at the direction of a majority of the cestuis, the fact that no sale was made by the trustee during his lifetime or during the life of any of the original beneficiaries does not extinguish the title of those who are the legal representatives.⁹⁷

Where the interest of a wife is not contingent on her remaining the wife of her husband under a trust created by the husband in his favor during his life, and on his death to his present wife, she is not deprived of her interest by reason of a divorce.⁹⁸ A trust in favor of the settlor for life and on his death to another during her natural life, and as long as she may remain unmarried, does not fail by her marriage to the settlor.⁹⁹ A trust is not terminated by the dissolution of a corporate trustee,¹ or on failure of the court to appoint a trustee on the resignation of an executor.² An absolute disposition or conveyance of all the trust property is held, under the circumstances of some cases, to terminate the trust.³ Consideration for a conveyance to terminate a trust is not necessary.⁴

The trust character of transaction, wherein aged woman turned over moneys to her brother to invest in real estate mortgage, was not terminated by execution and acceptance of his personal note for amount of such moneys as a guaranty of, or collateral security for, part or full payment of amount thereof to beneficiary, if needed by her at any time, so that trustee was not absolved from obligation to make such investment, or relieved from duty to account in equity for money received, on ground that beneficiary had available ade-

by acquiring the property for himself,⁶ or by improperly transferring the trust assets to another.⁷ A trust is not terminated by the refusal of a co-trustee to act.⁸ If a trustee deems that a trust should be terminated and the fund paid over to the beneficiary, the matter should be presented by him to the court and authority therefor obtained.⁹ If the trust property is reconveyed to the settlor, with the apparent acquiescence of the beneficiary, the trust may be terminated.¹⁰ Where the trust instrument states that the trustee may convey the trust property at the request and with the consent of the settlor, the trustee may thus convey the trust property and so terminate the trust.¹¹ A power granted trustees by the trust agreement to cancel it may not be exercised to enable one of the trustees to participate in a purchase of trust assets from the other trustee.¹² Where the trustee may terminate a trust by tendering the amount due, a statement in a letter that the trustee would pay the amount forthwith does not show tender, but an invitation to further negotiations.¹³

Between trustee and beneficiaries. A release of the interest of the cestui que trust to the trustee is sufficient to terminate the trust,¹⁴ as is also a proper transfer and conveyance by the trustee to the cestui que trust,¹⁵ and subsequent reconveyance to the trustee.¹⁶ The mere fact that the trustee has allowed the property to remain in the name of the beneficiary, or has permitted him to collect the interest or dividends thereon, is not sufficient to establish an intention on his part to relinquish the trust.¹⁷ A trustee and beneficiaries may not, by agreement or conveyance, terminate a trust which is an active¹⁸ or spendthrift¹⁹ trust, or where some of the beneficiaries do not consent or where possible beneficiaries may later come into existence.²⁰ A conveyance from the cestui to the trustee will not end a trust if executed solely for the purpose of lodging with the trustee a complete record title.²¹

The trust may continue regardless of a separate agreement entered into by the trustee and beneficiary,²² and where the trustee and beneficiary enter

quate remedy at law—Livingston v. Rein, 33 A.2d 840, 133 N.J. Eq. 585.

Effect of reconveyance

Where a settlor conveys property to an active trustee with the provision that the net income is to be paid her for life or that she can at her option occupy the property herself, with remainder to her issue or on failure of issue to collateral, her action in attempting to terminate the trust by a reconveyance to herself and in subsequently executing an agreement as an individual to sell the property to strangers, estops her from asserting the right to occupy the house herself—Lieberman v. Agreement accelerating two trusts

Where life tenant of inter vivos trust and life tenant of testamentary trust and remaindermen, entered into agreement purporting to settle and accelerate both trusts but testamentary trustee was ignored, and release which life tenants agreed to give on request in future would have released only inter vivos trustee, agreement did not effectuate an unconditional termination of life estates, and such agreement did not afford a basis for judgment that life tenants and remaindermen were presently entitled to receive corpus—Huckensack Trust Co. v. Barkerding, 76 A.2d 36, 9 N.J. Super. 595.

No effect on trust property

An instrument by which defendant deeded land to plaintiff, and by which plaintiff and defendant released all their claims against each other and agreed not to interfere with each other's business or trespass on each other's property, had no effect on property which defendant held in

into a separate partnership agreement with respect to the management of the trust property, the termination of the partnership does not operate as an abandonment of the trust by mutual agreement.²³ A trustee and sole beneficiary may change the trust relation to that of debtor and creditor.²⁴ A settlement of a continuing trust between the trustee and sole beneficiary whereby the original purposes of the trust are fully discharged terminates the trust,²⁵ and subsequent to such settlement the relationship between the parties is merely that of debtor and creditor, or, at the most, a constructive trust.²⁶ It has been held that the trust relationship may continue until it is terminated by a repudiation by the trustee brought home to the beneficiary,²⁷ or which, by the use of diligence, should have been so brought home to him.²⁸

A trust may be extinguished by a parol surrender by the beneficiary in any case in which the trustee so acts in reliance on the surrender as to make it inequitable for the beneficiary to assert his interest.²⁹ Where the beneficiaries and the trustee of the original trust agree to the creation of a subsequent trust, accepting their interests as beneficiaries under the subsequent trust in full satisfaction of their shares in the original trust, the creation of the subsequent trust terminates the original one.³⁰ The mere failure of the trustee to perform the trust and the failure of the beneficiary to compel him to perform it do not terminate the trust by extinguishing the interest of the beneficiary.³¹

Between settlor and trustee. A trust may be terminated by an authorized reconveyance to the settlor.³² Where, under a trust, the trustee reserves the right to resign, surrender the trust, and to reconvey the property to the settlor at any time, a reconveyance by the trustee ends the trust.³³ On the other hand, the trust will not terminate by virtue of an unauthorized surrender of the trust and reconveyance to the settlor.³⁴

Beneficiary becoming sole trustee. Where the beneficiaries of a trust are also the trustees, the fact that one becomes sole trustee for his own benefit does not destroy the trust,³⁵ but it is improper for the beneficiary to act except by direction of the court.³⁶

Judicial proceedings. A trust is terminated by a judicial sale under an encumbrance made prior to the creation of the trust,³⁷ but has been held not terminated by a decree in a suit for an accounting.³⁸ A decree entered pursuant to stipulation of the parties to a suit to have the trust declared void may abrogate the trust.³⁹

Removal of trustee. Where the trust is a personal one, on the removal of the trustee the trust will come to an end.⁴⁰

§ 96. Effect

On the termination of a trust, the estate of the trustee ceases, and the legal, as well as the equitable, title vests in the beneficial owner.

Guardian obtaining funds

Fact that claimant, through a guardian, could have secured some or all of the funds in a trust for claimant's support and education if application had been made while claimant was a minor did not authorize claimant to obtain funds after trust, by its terms, had ended.—In re Gorgas' Estate, 24 A.2d 171, 147 Pa.Super. 319.

the necessity of any act or intervention on the part of the trustee,⁴³ unless the intention of the creator appears that the legal title should continue in the trustee.⁴⁴ The termination of a trust leaves the trustee with a mere administrative title to the fund.⁴⁵ Where the purposes of an express trust cease or are fulfilled, the estate of the trustee ceases,⁴⁶ and the absolute estate is in the person beneficially interested,⁴⁷ unless the intention of the settlor clearly appears that the legal title should continue in the trustee.⁴⁸ On the termination of a trust, the trust property will vest absolutely in the trustee where so provided by the trust instrument.⁴⁹ Under the trust agreement, the settlor may be entitled to a refund or repayment of trust funds on termination of the agreement.⁵⁰ Where the trust provides that it is to terminate on the death of the settlor, at which time the trustees are to dispose of the property, the trust does not terminate immediately on such death but continues for a reasonable time for the winding up of its affairs and transfer of its property to the proper persons.⁵¹ Although it has been held that on termination the powers and office of the trustee terminate,⁵² at the time of termination, the trustee is not immediately divested of all duties and responsibilities,⁵³ but he has powers and duties appropriate for a winding up of trust affairs.⁵⁴

The termination of a trust by a decree of court divests the trustee of the legal title to the trust estate,⁵⁵ but until a final settlement under the decree is made with the beneficiary, the relationship of trustee and cestui que trust continues.⁵⁶ Where the trust terminates on the death of the trustee, a person ceases to be beneficiary under the trust,⁵⁷ and the trust estate vests in the parties designated by the settlor.⁵⁸ On the death of a life tenant, legal title to the trust property may immediately vest in the remaindermen.⁵⁹ The power of investment ceases on the termination of the trust.⁶⁰ Provisions against encumbrance and alienation in a spendthrift trust are no longer operative after the termination of the trust and both legal and equitable title have merged.⁶¹ Where a trust is terminated by mutual agreement and on accomplishment of the purpose, a contract entered into by the sole beneficiary with a third person is not binding on the estate.⁶² It has been held that if a trust is terminated by operation of law,⁶³ or if there is no imperative requirement on the trustee to act within a definite time,⁶⁴ the beneficiary may proceed as though the trust were terminated.

After termination of a trust, a settlor may acquiesce in the use of trust funds and join in the reestablishment of the trust.⁶⁵ A trust for the separate use of a married woman which terminates on the dissolution of coverture will not revive for her protection under a second marriage.⁶⁶ After a trust has once become executed and extinguished, it is not revived by the nonexecution of a subsequent trust relating to the same property.⁶⁷

B. RESULTING TRUSTS

1. IN GENERAL

§ 98. Nature and Types

Resulting trusts are created by operation of law, and are creatures of equity. A resulting trust is a passive or dry trust.

Resulting trusts are created by operation of law.⁶⁸ They are creatures of equity⁶⁹ and are based on the equitable doctrine concerning consideration,⁷⁰ the doctrine that valuable consideration and not legal title determines the equitable title or interest.⁷¹ Unlike constructive trusts, discussed infra § 139 et seq, resulting trusts are not remedial in character.⁷² A resulting trust is always a passive or dry trust,⁷³ a mere holding of the title for the benefit of another,⁷⁴ no duties or responsibilities being imposed on the trustee as to the management, control, or disposition of the property⁷⁵ except, perhaps, to convey to the cestui que trust at his direction.⁷⁶

Resulting trusts, it has been said, are of two general types: Those where a purchase has been made and the legal estate is conveyed or transferred to one person, but the purchase price is paid by another person; and those where there is a gift by deed or will to a donee or grantee without pecuniary consideration coming from the grantee, but the intention appears from the instrument itself, that the legal and beneficial estates are to be separated and that the grantee or donee is either to enjoy no beneficial interest or only part of it.⁷⁷

To state it differently, the two general types are: Those where property is conveyed or transferred by one person to another but a third person either furnishes the consideration for the transfer or has such an interest in the property that it is considered as held for his benefit; and those where property is transferred without any consideration coming from the donee or grantee and under circumstances such that he is considered as holding the property for the benefit of the donor or grantor or those holding under him.

Property or interest subject to trust. The doctrine of resulting trusts in all of its phases applies alike to personal and to real property.⁷⁸ The trust may arise as to a part of the property or a part of the interest therein, and not as to the residue, according to the intent existing in each particular case;⁷⁹ but it is impossible to enforce it if the trust interest cannot be measured as to its value, or as to its fractional dimensions as compared with the whole property divided or undivided.⁸⁰

Extinction of trust. The trustee's recognition and acknowledgment of a resulting trust do not destroy it and create an express trust.⁸¹ Where the trustee conveys the property to the beneficiary, the resulting trust is terminated.⁸² A resulting trust is destroyed or terminated by the release or surrender to the trustee of the beneficiary's interest.⁸³ Although there is some authority to the contrary,⁸⁴ at least in the case of a trust resulting where an express trust fails or is fully performed without exhausting the trust estate,⁸⁵ it is generally held that no writing is necessary for the extinguishment of a resulting trust⁸⁶ and that the beneficiary of a resulting trust may by parol release or surrender his interest to the trustee,⁸⁷ at least in the case of a resulting trust which is established by parol evidence.⁸⁸ A release or surrender of the beneficial interest to the trustee is effected by any conduct and language on the part of the beneficiary which would naturally lead a reasonable person in the trustee's position to conclude that the beneficiary had surrendered his interest.⁸⁹ Where there is performance by the trustee in accordance with the oral agreement of the beneficiary to surrender or release his interest, or where he has changed his position in reliance on the beneficiary's parol surrender, the surrender is effective irrespective of the requirements of the statute of frauds.⁹⁰

§ 99. What Law Governs

The existence of a resulting trust with respect to land is to be determined by the law of the state where the land is located.

Whether or not a resulting trust has arisen in respect of certain land is to be determined by the laws of the state in which the land is located.⁹¹

§ 100. Statutory Provisions

§ 101. — Effect of Statutes of Frauds and Statutes Prohibiting Parol Trusts

The statute of frauds or a statute prohibiting parol trusts does not apply to resulting trusts.

As a general rule the state of frauds or a statute prohibiting parol trusts applies only to trusts expressly created or declared by the parties;⁹⁶ and resulting trusts, since they arise by operation of law from the facts and circumstances attending the transaction, are valid notwithstanding such facts and circumstances rest in parol,⁹⁷ and, as considered infra § 133, parol evidence is admissible to prove a resulting trust. However, as discussed infra § 102 d a mere parol agreement to take title in trust for another, invalid as within the statute of frauds, cannot be enforced as a resulting trust in the absence of other facts and circumstances surrounding the transaction which may cause a trust to result. Resulting trusts are expressly exempted from the provisions of the statute of frauds in some jurisdictions⁹⁸ and are within an exception of trusts created by operation of law⁹⁹ or raised or resulting by implication or construction of law.¹

Agreement not to be performed within a year.

The clause of the statute of frauds which prohibits the bringing of an action on an agreement not to be performed within one year from the making thereof, unless the agreement is in writing, has no application to an action to enforce a trust resulting by implication of law.²

a. In General

A resulting trust is created where the legal estate is disposed of or acquired but the intent appears or is inferred or assumed from the terms of the disposition or from the accompanying facts and circumstances that the beneficial interest is not to go with the legal title.

In general a resulting trust arises whenever the legal title is in one person but the beneficial interest, either from the payment of the purchase money or other circumstances, is either wholly or partially in another;³ where the legal estate is disposed of or acquired, not fraudulently or in violation of any fiduciary duty,⁴ but the intent appears or is inferred or assumed from the terms of the disposition or from the accompanying facts and circumstances that the beneficial interest is not to go with the legal title.⁵ Since the person who holds the property is not entitled to the beneficial interest, and the beneficial interest is not otherwise disposed of, it springs back or results to the person who made the disposition, or to his estate.⁶ More broadly, it has been stated that a resulting trust arises where property is acquired and held in the name of one person which in equity belongs to another,⁷ as where one becomes invested with the title to property under circumstances which in equity obligate him to hold the title and exercise his ownership for the benefit of another.⁸ It has been held that a resulting trust will be recognized where it is equitable or just to do so to prevent unjust enrichment.⁹

The law implies a trust where the acts of the person to be charged as trustee are such as in honesty and fair dealing are consistent only with the purpose to hold the property in trust;¹⁰ it is sufficient if the transaction is such that otherwise an injustice would be worked against the supposed cestui que trust.¹¹ It must be founded on an equity in favor of the cestui que trust against the holder of the legal title,¹² it will not arise merely from the relationship of debtor and creditor,¹³ nor does it depend on the general state of accounts between the parties.¹⁴ A resulting trust cannot arise where property is given to a person for his own use,¹⁵ and

Olympic games

No resulting trust for state in proceeds of Olympic games arose, where funds received from sale of state bonds were paid out for expenses on organizing committee's demand, audited by State Olympiad Commission, and no intention to separate beneficial interest from legal title appeared.—*Xth Olympiad Committee of Games of Los Angeles, U.S.A. 1932 v. it has been said that it never arises in the hands of one who is the real owner of the property.¹⁶

A resulting trust arises from, or is created by, the facts and circumstances of the transaction,¹⁷ which need not be the same in all cases;¹⁸ and in determining whether a resulting trust has been created, each case is to be decided on its own facts,¹⁹ and the doctrine of resulting trust will be applied wherever the facts are such as clearly to invoke its application.²⁰ Among other situations a resulting trust has been held to arise where a person comes into possession and control of the property of another;²¹ where money is placed in the hands of one person to be delivered to another;²² where a person who has assigned certain money to become due on performance of an obligatory contract, receives such money;²³ where damages are collected from a tort-feasor for an injury for which the injured person has already been compensated by way of insurance, and the insurer is subrogated to the claim;²⁴ where a husband deposits money in the name of his wife and it is understood that the money is to remain the property of the husband;²⁵ where money which is not connected with the controversy and is not referred to them is collected by arbitrators;²⁶ where funds are received by the owners of a vessel as damages for interference with a whaling or sealing voyage in which the officers and crew received a certain lay or share of the proceeds

Resulting trust held created

(1) Where lessees of oil interest in land orally agreed to pay attorneys one-fourth of amount recovered on lessees' claims against an assignee of oil lease and, after attorneys obtained judgments against assignee, lessees obtained reconveyance of oil interest in settlement of judgment debts and released such interest, the attorneys were entitled to one-fourth of proceeds obtained as result of the settlement including one-fourth of royalties received by lessees, and equity would enforce a "resulting trust" in favor of the attorneys for their share of the proceeds, regardless of fact that the oral agreement gave no lien to the attorneys.—Harvey v. Ballagh, 101 P.2d 147, 38 Cal. App.2d 348.

(2) Where husband, living apart from wife, delivered to the wife a deed to certain property under agreement whereby proceeds from the sale thereof were to be deposited in bank and withdrawn weekly for support of wife and child and residence was destroyed by fire before sale was made, a resulting trust was created for purpose of carrying out of agreement, and husband was not entitled to recover proceeds of insurance, but to effectuate agreement, the house would be treated as converted into personality and proceeds would be applied in accordance with agreement.—Christy v. Christy, 44 N.Y.S.2d 579.

Resulting trust held not created

(1) Formation of corporation, to which owner of land and water rights conveyed distribution system before selling lands and interests in such rights to others, created no resulting trust for latter.—Braley v. Empire Water Co., 20 P.2d 75, 130 Cal.App. 532.

(2) Where a bank, which was trustee under mortgage authorizing it to advance money for payment of taxes on mortgaged realty, did not purchase realty at tax sale, knew nothing about such sale or tax certificate issued to purchaser in name of bank, which later assigned it to purchaser, and advanced no money on account of such certificate, holders of bonds secured by mortgage were not equitably entitled to benefit of certificate.—Fitzpatrick v. Tice, 40 N.E.2d 997, 111 Ind.App. 121.

(3) Where one purchasing land from city agreed with person financing purchase to assume responsibility for sale or development of property and to share proceeds therefrom, but purchaser obtained additional tract of land comprising abandoned street and sold additional tract to third party, no resulting trust existed in favor of person financing purchase as against third party, notwithstanding that conveyances to and from purchaser named purchaser as "trustee" since such word was merely descriptive of the person.—Beatty v. Fellows, 74 P.2d 677, 101 Colo. 466.

(4) Where mother deeded property to three children to distribute proportionate share that they would succeed to on her death, and mother remained in possession of the property and collected rents under supervision of older daughter, who had acquired the interest of one of the other children, there was no implied agreement by older daughter to account to other child for rents and profits received during life of mother.—*Hitchcock v. An exchange by a mortgagor of standing timber on mortgaged lands for other lands, taking title to himself, raises a resulting trust in the lands received in exchange to the extent to which the mortgage security is depleted.²⁹ An unauthorized conveyance of one's property to another has been held to give rise to an implied trust.³⁰ It has been held that one who pledges securities for the payment of a debt is an implied trustee, and that any property received by him by virtue of his ownership of the securities is subject to an implied trust to apply it to the payment of the debt and the redemption of the pledge.³¹ One collecting taxes for the government holds the funds in trust for the government,³² but, where a tax imposed on the seller and based on the selling price of the goods is paid by the seller and the amount thereof added to the selling price, such amount is not held in trust for the buyer when the tax is refunded by the government on the basis that the law never authorized its imposition.³³ It has been held that an employer who makes deductions from his employees' pay for the purpose of paying for a service rendered to his employees by a third person does not hold the funds in trust for the third person where the deductions were not made pursuant to agreement with the employees or the third person.³⁴ Where a life tenant intended to use the proceeds of a sale of timber to improve the property, his executor did not hold the proceeds of the sale in trust for that purpose.³⁵ One recovering judgment for personal injuries does not hold as trustee from the amount paid in settlement of the judgment, a sufficient sum for the payment of the physician who attended him;³⁶ nor will a trust in the proceeds of insurance policies result where a husband fails to keep his agreement to make his wife the beneficiary of his insurance policies on her agreement not to contest his will.³⁷

Some cases have attempted to categorize the situations in which a resulting trust arises,³⁸ as, for example, where property is purchased in the name of one person, but the money or consideration is paid by another, as discussed infra § 115 et seq; where a person standing in a fiduciary relation uses fiduciary funds or assets to purchase property in his own or a third person's name infra § 114; where there is a disposition of property on trusts which are not declared, or are only partially declared, or are illegal, infra § 103; and where a conveyance is made without any consideration and it appears from the circumstances that the grantee was not intended to take beneficially, infra § 105.

Tort; fraud. No tort or breach of duty is involved in a resulting trust.³⁹ It has been said that a resulting trust will arise in certain cases of fraud where transactions have been carried on mala fide,⁴⁰ and that fraud is an essential element of a resulting trust;⁴¹ but the trust which arises in the case of fraudulent transactions is more properly classified as a constructive trust and not as a resulting trust.⁴² It is generally held that a resulting trust is not based on fraud or misrepresentation,⁴³ and fraud is not a necessary element of a resulting trust⁴⁴ and it is not necessary that there be anything savoring of fraud, or misrepresentation, or mistake in the transaction.⁴⁵

Effect of illegality of transaction. In order to raise a resulting trust the transaction must be honest;⁴⁶ a resulting trust cannot arise from acts contrary to public policy or a statute⁴⁷ or in favor of the guilty person out of acts which have their origin in a fraudulent purpose,⁴⁸ as where a person conveys property to another in fraud of his creditors, as discussed in Fraudulent Conveyances § 271. However, if the property is a homestead so that it is exempt by law from liability for the owner's debts and, therefore, not susceptible of a fraudulent alienation the fact that the beneficial owner transferred the legal title to, or caused it to be taken in the name of, another so as to put it beyond the reach of his creditors will not prevent the creation of the trust.⁴⁹ Equity will not recognize a resulting trust for the accomplishment of a purpose which, because of illegality or violation of public policy, is beyond the powers of an express trust.⁵⁰

b. Intention of Parties

As a general rule, a resulting trust arises where, and only where, such may reasonably be presumed to be the intention of the parties, as determined from the facts and circumstances existing at the time of the transaction.

The doctrine of resulting trusts is founded on the presumed intention of the parties;⁵¹ and, as a general rule, it arises where, and only where, such may be reasonably presumed to be the intention of the parties, as determined from the facts and circumstances existing at the time of the transaction out of which it is sought to be established.⁵² In a resulting trust there is always the element of an intention to create a trust,⁵³ which is not ex-

pressed⁵⁴ but is implied or presumed by law from the attendant circumstances⁵⁵ and without regard to the particular intention of the parties;⁵⁶ so, in a proper case, the trust may exist notwithstanding the party to be charged as trustee may never have agreed to the trust and may have really intended to resist it.⁵⁷

Since, however, a resulting trust is designed to carry the presumptive intention of the parties into effect, not to defeat it,⁵⁸ it must be consistent with the intention of the parties at the time of the acquisition of the property⁵⁹ and will not be presumed or implied unless taking all the circumstances together it is the fair and reasonable interpretation of their acts and transactions.⁶⁰ A resulting trust will not be created or enforced contrary to the ascertained intention of the parties.⁶¹ So, while it is not essential to the creation of a resulting trust that the proof should show there was an agreement to that effect, it may be defeated by proof of an understanding between the parties that no trust should result,⁶² as where there is an intent that the party in whose name the property is taken should hold it as his own,⁶³ or where there is an express agreement in writing showing an intent not to create a trust.⁶⁴

c. Necessity for and Effect of Contract

A resulting trust does not arise out of, and is not dependent on, the existence of a contract or agreement between the parties.

Since, as stated supra § 98, resulting trusts are created by operation of law, they do not arise out of, and are not dependent on, the existence of a contract or agreement between the parties,⁶⁵ but arise

The intention to create a resulting trust is never expressed directly in words, but equity may infer it, in proper cases, on equitable principle that the beneficial estate follows consideration and attaches to the person from whom the consideration comes.—*Cresman v. Express understanding is not necessary element of resulting trust, but action of parties with respect to payment and the deed is deemed to amount to expression of trust intent which takes place of an oral or written agreement.—McKenna v. Lasswell, 250 P.2d 208, 297 Okl. 408.

Resulting trust does not rest on express agreement but on an implied agreement by which title is taken in the name of another as a matter of convenience.—Hooks v. Hooks, 63 So. 2d 348, 258 Ala. 427—J. A. Owens & Co. v. Blanks, 144 So. 35, 225 Ala. 566.

Implied trusts are not created by agreement and are not the results of agreement, express or implied, but are products of conduct, in which it is not necessary that cestui que trust have any part or knowledge but with respect to which the law imputes an intention to the actor and the obligation to do equity when called on to do so, irrespective of whether actor had any such intention.—Rimmer v. Austin, 4 So.2d 224, 191 Miss. 664.

Resulting trusts are consensual in origin, and with such relationships the presumptions of innocence and fair dealing apply.—Brown v. New York Life Ins. Co., D.C.Or., 58 F. Supp. 252, affirmed, C.C.A., 152 F.2d 246.

by implication of law from their acts and conduct.⁶⁶ So a trust may result without any contract or understanding between the trustee and cestui que trust,⁶⁷ and even in the total ignorance of the parties.⁶⁸ A resulting trust will not arise from a contract or agreement which is legally enforceable,⁶⁹ and a contract or agreement, of itself, cannot create a resulting trust.⁷⁰

On the other hand, the mere existence of an agreement or understanding between the parties will not preclude a resulting trust,⁷¹ and it may be considered as throwing light on their intention⁷² or in establishing the fact of the ownership of the purchase money and how it was invested.⁷³ A trust may result from a grant or contract, the purpose of which turns out to be incapable of performance or of specific performance.⁷⁴ The mere fact that the person to whom a conveyance is made has agreed to purchase or hold the property for another, who has not paid any or has paid only a very small part of the purchase money, does not create a resulting trust in the latter's favor,⁷⁵ particularly where such agreement is made after the property has been purchased,⁷⁶ or where it does not appear that any valid consideration was given for such agreement.⁷⁷ Where, however, the purchase money is paid by the promisee,⁷⁸ or there is fraud at the time of the sale,⁷⁹ or the promisee has an actual interest in the property or a bona fide claim thereto,⁸⁰ the courts have, in various cases, held a trust to result although such situations are more often treated as giving rise to constructive trusts, as discussed infra § 150.

d. Express Trust

A resulting trust cannot arise where there is a valid express trust; but where the facts are such as to create a resulting trust, an express trust declaration, unenforceable because it is oral, will not prevent a resulting trust from arising.

65 C.J. p 370 note 10.

A resulting trust cannot arise where there is a valid express trust declared by the parties or evidenced by a written declaration thereof,⁸¹ and where an agreement is made at the time of the transaction to hold the property on a trust different from that which would arise by implication of law,⁸² or where the trustee is expressly directed by the trust instrument to take and hold the conveyance in his own name,⁸³ a resulting trust will not arise. An express trust cannot be transformed into a resulting trust, merely because of the want of legal evidence to establish it as an express trust;⁸⁴ a parol agreement to take title in trust for another, invalid as within the statute of frauds, cannot be enforced as a resulting trust in the absence of other facts and circumstances surrounding the transaction which may cause such a trust to result.⁸⁵ However, it has been held that the fact that there has been an express trust declared by parol which is invalid because of the statute of frauds will not prevent a trust from resulting by operation of law from the acts of the parties.⁸⁶ So, if the circumstances are such as to give rise to a resulting trust, it is not affected by an express parol agreement between the parties to the same effect.⁸⁷ A resulting trust will not arise from a mere promise to execute an agreement declaratory of a trust, where the promise is on certain conditions which the promisee refuses to comply with.⁸⁸ A person is not precluded from setting up a resulting trust by reason of a declaration of trust to which he is not a party.⁸⁹

e. Time of Creation

A resulting trust must result, if at all, the instant the title passes, and will not arise on other than the state of facts existing when the property is acquired.

Subsequent written declaration of trust

Written declaration of trust at later date does not preclude existence of an implied trust to the same effect, founded in parol and on acts and conduct of creator of trust.—Thomas v. Dye, supra.

Statements recognizing trust

Existence of a resulting trust arising from acts of parties is strengthened by consistent oral expressions of parties manifesting their intentions, understandings, and agreements that grantee is seized and holds in trust for purchaser and true owner, although agreement is void as an express trust because it relates to land and is not in writing.—Padgett v. Osborne, 221 S.W.2d 210, 359 Mo. 209.

Innocent writing

An implied or resulting trust may arise when written instrument of parties is insufficient adequately to fix their rights and responsibilities inter sese.—McHain v. Sorensen, 20 N.W.2d 449, 236 Iowa 996.

In Illinois

(1) While neither an express nor resulting trust can be created by parol agreement, intention of parties may be shown thereby, and existence of such parol agreement will not prevent a resulting trust if it is otherwise established by clear and convincing evidence.—Carrillo v. currences,⁹¹ and subsequent statements and occurrences may be considered only insofar as they throw light on the intention of the parties at the time title was transferred.⁹² After the legal title has once vested in the grantee of a deed, a resulting trust cannot be raised so as to divest that legal estate by the subsequent application of the funds of a third person to the improvement of the property or to satisfy the unpaid purchase money.⁹³ Verbal declarations at the time of the purchase,⁹⁴ or subsequent thereto,⁹⁵ or parol agreements between the parties made before or after the conveyance of the property,⁹⁶ will not give rise to a resulting trust unless the transaction is such that a trust results at the moment the title passes.

Alteration or modification. A resulting trust arises by operation of law the instant the estate passes

§ 103. Failure or Defect in Creation of Express Trust, or Execution and Termination Thereof

A resulting trust arises in favor of the grantor of a conveyance in trust where the trust is insufficiently declared or fails or the trust is illegal or unauthorized.

A commonly recognized type of resulting trust is that which arises in favor of the donor where the trusts of a conveyance are not declared, or are only partially declared, or fail.⁹⁸ So, where property is conveyed on an express trust which fails, in whole or in part, a resulting trust arises as against the trustee in favor of the grantor and those claiming under him in the property conveyed⁹⁹ or in the

Trust for future corporation

Transaction by which promoters of corporation had acquired title to lease under agreement contemplating that they would later promote a corporation to which lease would be transferred did not create resulting trust in favor of corporation, since such a trust arises from transaction itself and at time legal title passes, and title could not be affected even if plans for incorporation were abandoned.—McAllister v. residue of the property remaining at the time of the failure or extinguishment of the trust¹ if the property is not otherwise disposed of.² The rule does not apply where the conveyance to the trustees imports an intention to benefit the grantees in the event that the trust declared fails,³ or that the grantee shall take a beneficial interest;⁴ nor does it apply to cause property to pass as intestate to the heirs of a grantor who had conveyed title during his lifetime to a grantee who executed an invalid declaration of trust but not as part of the same transaction.⁵ Further, if the conveyance was on a consideration furnished by the grantee and the trust fails the grantee takes the beneficial interest,⁶ and it has been held that if the conveyance was on a consideration paid by some one other than the grantee a trust results in favor of the person furnishing the consideration.⁷ It has also been held that an abortive attempt to create a trust by a particular method will not be construed to be a trust on a different theory;⁸ thus were the settlor does not deliver the deed of transfer, equity will not treat the undelivered instrument as a declaration of trust.⁹

superior power of United States to seize rights of its beneficiaries, there could be no resulting trust to the settlor, and there was no need for application of doctrine of cy pres—Brownell v. Fidelity Union Trust Co., D.C.N.J., 119 F.Supp. 755.

(2) The imposition of wartime controls and the freezing of payments to German residents was not such a defeasance of right of trust beneficiaries, who were residents of Germany, as to require return of corpus to settlor, on theory of resulting trust, because of impossibility of operation of the trust; order vesting interests of trust beneficiaries, who were residents of Germany, in Alien Property Custodian did not necessarily work a total forfeiture on beneficiaries and did not require return of corpus to settlor under theory of resulting trust—In re Hellmann's Trust, 132 N.Y.S.2d 254.

Where inter vivos trust indenture was void so that no express trust was created which could thereafter fail, trustee named in trust indenture could not claim that it held property of trustor who died intestate on a resulting trust for the benefit of trustor's heirs—Atlantic Nat. Bank of Jacksonville, Fla., v. St. Louis Union Trust Co., 211 S.W.2d 2, 357 Mo. 770.

Presumption conclusive

The presumption of a desire on part of settlor that trust property return to him or his successors in case of the failure of an express trust is conclusive and not rebuttable—Pedrick v. Guarantee Trust Co., 197 A. 909, 123 N.J.Eq. 395.

as to its purposes¹³ or beneficiaries.¹⁴ As discussed supra § 102 d, where a conveyance is on an express trust which cannot be established because of the want of legal evidence thereof, as in the case of a parol trust unenforceable under the statute of frauds, such fact alone is insufficient to allow the express trust to be enforced as a resulting trust; but, where the facts and circumstances are sufficient to establish a resulting trust, the fact that there is an invalid parol trust will not prevent the resulting trust from arising.

Illegality of trust. A resulting trust in favor of the grantor arises where property is conveyed on a trust which is illegal or unauthorized,¹⁵ as where it violates the rule against perpetuities.¹⁶

general rule, a trust results in favor of the grantor of a conveyance in trust where the trust fails for want of a beneficiary,¹⁷ or because the beneficiary dies¹⁸ or becomes nonexistent¹⁹ or does not come into existence.²⁰

Failure of purposes. A trust results in favor of the grantor of a conveyance in trust where the purposes of the trust fail,²¹ as where the objects and purposes of the trust have ceased,²² or it no longer can be executed pursuant to its provisions.²³

Partial declaration of trust. The rule under consideration applies where the trust does not extend to the whole interest given to the trustee,²⁴ as where, after the purposes of the trust have been discharged, a residue remains in the hands of the trustee.²⁵

Gift to charity

The doctrine of resulting trust in connection with a gift to a charitable institution which no longer exists is not controlled by technical distinctions

tions between vested and contingent remainders, but is governed by question of whether testator's charitable program has been frustrated: for purposes of applying the doctrine of resulting trust in favor of a charitable institution, it is immaterial whether interference with testator's charitable program arises before or after his death.—Horton v. Revocation or termination. The rule under consideration applies where there is a valid revocation²⁶ or termination²⁷ of the trust.

§ 104. Imperfect Gift

Equity will not convert an imperfect gift into a declaration of trust merely because of such imperfection.

A trust does not result where a person purchases property with his own funds and takes title in his own name with the intention of giving the property to another.²⁸ Mere declarations or expressions of intention to give the property to another will not create a resulting trust.²⁹ Equity will not convert an imperfect gift into a declaration of trust, merely because of such imperfection;³⁰ and so, where a donor delivers personally to his agent with instructions to give it to a specified donee, which the agent fails to do, such agent is not a trustee of the property for the donee.³¹ The courts are reluctant to declare a trust to save a gift which is imperfect for want of delivery.³² In determining whether the one to whom the property has been transferred for delivery to the beneficiary is a trustee or an agent of the donor, the formality of the transaction must be considered,³³ and, in order to establish a trust by acts alone in the absence of an express trust agreement, there must be shown an unequivocal intent on the part of the donor to divest himself of the control and dominion of the trust res.³⁴ Where a parent purchased a mortgage with funds of her own and had the title made to herself as trustee for her infant child, a trust has been held to have been created in favor of the child.³⁵

§ 105. Want or Failure of Consideration for Conveyance

Where a conveyance is made without consideration, and is not intended as a gift, a resulting trust ordinarily arises in favor of the grantor; but this rule is not available where the deed recites the payment of a valuable consideration.

As a general rule, where a conveyance of property is made without a valuable consideration therefor, express or implied, and is not intended as a gift, a resulting trust arises in favor of the grantor.³⁶

Adoption of child

Where insured procured a life policy naming as beneficiary her minor daughter and upon being informed of fatal nature of an illness executed a change of beneficiary directing a lump-sum payment to plaintiff who was to adopt the child and order of adoption was subsequently revoked, plaintiff would hold the proceeds of the policy under a resulting trust for the benefit of the child—Childers v. Breeze, 213 P.2d 565, 202 Okl. 377.

Stranger to conveyance

The resulting trust which the law creates from a gratuitous conveyance wherein the grantee is not intended

While the absence of a consideration is essential,³⁷ the mere want of consideration does not of itself operate to create a resulting trust for the benefit of a grantor in a deed against his grantee or those claiming under him as privies to such deed;³⁸ but there must be in addition circumstances evidencing that the grantee was not intended to take beneficially.³⁹ The general statement has been made that a voluntary conveyance cannot be held to create a resulting trust in favor of the grantor,⁴⁰ and it has been held that a want or failure of consideration for a conveyance does not raise a resulting trust.⁴¹

A trust will not result where the conveyance is intended as a gift to the grantee.⁴² Where a transfer of property is made without consideration, it is normally construed as a gift and there is no resulting trust,⁴³ particularly where the transfer is to one whom the grantor is under a legal or moral obligation to support, such as his wife or child;⁴⁴ but this inference may be overcome by proof of facts showing an intent to the contrary.⁴⁵ Where the grantee occupies a confidential or fiduciary relation towards the grantor, a resulting trust in favor of the grantor will be presumed from a conveyance without consideration.⁴⁶

Where the husband acquires possession of his wife's separate property otherwise than by gift, he is deemed to hold it in trust for her,⁴⁷ and it to take beneficially is a trust in favor of grantor making the conveyance and no such trust may be created in favor of a stranger to the conveyance.—Frame v. Wright, 9 N.W.2d 364, 233 Iowa 394, 147 A.L.R. 1154.

Assumption of debt

(1) Where grantee becomes bound for the payment of his grantor's debt, and the property is security for the payment of the debt, and the grantor is released from liability, there is sufficient consideration.—Ellis v. Nickle, 101 S.W.2d 958, 193 Ark 657.

(2) Where all the parties deemed lands with existing loan a liability and the assumption of such obligation by the grantee was not only beneficial to the grantor but was in compliance with such intention, no resulting trust existed.—Jones v. Crawford, 30 So.2d 57, 201 Miss 791, suggestion of error overruled 30 So. 2d 513, 201 Miss 791.

(3) No trust resulted on theory of absence of consideration, where son in accepting conveyance agreed to assume heavy indebtedness on property, and paid off substantial part thereof.—Holtze v. Holtze, 42 P.2d 323, 2 Cal.2d 566.

Where consideration was actually paid, resulting trust for benefit of grantor and his estate was not created in absence of express agreement or fraud.—Gilligan v. Jones, 283 N.W. 434, 226 Iowa 86.

Wife's consent

(1) Husband who acquires possession of separate property of wife, with or without her consent, holds it in trust for her benefit, in absence of evidence that she intended to make a gift of property to him.

has been held that a transfer of a wife's property to her husband without an adequate consideration raises a rebuttable presumption of a resulting trust in her favor.⁴⁸ It has also been held that no trust resulted where a husband gave an absolute deed to realty to his wife and she agreed to pay a certain sum of money, which promise she failed to perform.⁴⁹

Recitals or declarations as to consideration. Although in some jurisdictions a failure of consideration may raise a resulting trust even though the deed recites a consideration,⁵⁰ the general rule is that in the absence of fraud or mistake,⁵¹ a resulting trust will not arise in favor of the grantor although a valuable consideration is not in fact paid, where a declaration to the contrary is made by the grantor at the time of the conveyance,⁵² as where the conveyance recites a valuable consideration as paid by the grantee,⁵³ even though it be only nominal,⁵⁴ particularly where the conveyance is absolute in form and the habendum clause declares the beneficial use or interest in the property to be in the grantee⁵⁵ or some third person.⁵⁶ Such a recital in a deed cannot be contradicted by parol evidence by the parties to the deed, or by those holding under them;⁵⁷ and except in cases of fraud or mistake⁵⁸ parol evidence is not admissible in such a case to show that no consideration was given for the deed, or that it was voluntary, so as to establish a resulting trust in favor of the grantor, or those claiming under him.⁵⁹ When a conveyance purports to have been made for a good and valuable consideration paid by the grantee, the presumption of law is that the estate is held by him for his own use.⁶⁰

It has been held that, where a father, having executed, in favor of his daughter, an instrument which is ineffectual as a conveyance, but of which fact he is ignorant, immediately after her marriage delivers property to the husband under the belief that such instrument secures it to her sole and separate use and the husband accepts it with full notice and under a similar belief, a trust arises in behalf of the wife which a court of equity will enforce—Betts v. Personal obligation

Where plaintiff invested at least fifteen thousand dollars in improved realty located in New Jersey, and only consideration recited in deed executed by plaintiff conveying property to his brother and brother's wife was their assumption of nine thousand dollars in mortgages, and it did not appear that plaintiff intended to make a gift of his six thousand dollar equity to brother and his wife, amount invested by plaintiff which was not included in consideration recited in the deed constituted an acknowledged indebtedness for which plaintiff was entitled to personal money judgment against brother's wife after death of brother, even though plaintiff was not entitled to a resulting trust in the property under New Jersey law.—Filson v. Contract to purchase made by borrower

Where a person pays in behalf of purchaser the purchase price of land and takes title thereto from the vendor pursuant to express agreement to convey land to purchaser on purchaser's repayment, there is a resulting trust in favor of the purchaser, especially where purchaser has equitable title in the property under his contract with vendor—

French v. Pearson, 45 A.2d 300, 94 N.H. 18.

Where one asserting a trust in realty at moment of conveyance is legally bound to one acquiring legal title to repay the money advanced, the purchase is with the fund of the beneficiary—Vickers v. Quinn, Tex. Civ.App., 154 S.W.2d 947.

Unenforceable contract to make loan

Under unenforceable preliminary contract by defendant to lend plaintiff money with which to purchase land, if defendant took title with plaintiff's knowledge and acquiescence, expecting to convey title to plaintiff when repaid, title would have been charged with a trust in favor of plaintiff, either resulting or express, and agreement would have been memorialized by defendant at the very time that the title was conveyed to him—Jarrett v. Hall, Tex. Civ.App., 207 S.W.2d 261.

Violation of agreement

When a third person, having agreed with the mortgagor to purchase the mortgaged land on foreclosure for a specified amount, bid in the land and paid such amount, the debt from the mortgagor to the third person was then created, and the third person's failure to have the deed made to the mortgagor and to take a mortgage from him as originally agreed on entitled the mortgagor to maintain a suit to declare a resulting trust in the nature of a mortgage, but did not prevent the transaction from being a consummation of the loan.—Booth v. Mason, 176 So. 201, 234 Ala. 601.

Written contract

An oral agreement to loan borrower money to save home occupied by borrower and wife created a resulting trust under which lender held legal title in trust for borrower, al-

nature of a mortgage⁶⁸ which the person to whom the money was loaned has a right to redeem and compel a conveyance of the property;⁶⁹ but the lender has the right to hold the title as security until the loan is repaid.⁷⁰ If the lender sells the property, he must account to the borrower for the money realized therefrom.⁷¹ It has been held that a trust results in favor of the borrower where the grantee lends his credit rather than his money.⁷² Thus, it has been held that where the one claiming the resulting trust pays part of the purchase price in cash the fact that the balance of the purchase price is paid from the proceeds of a bond and mortgage executed by the one to whom title is transferred does not prevent a trust from resulting as to the entire property;⁷³ but it has also been held that in such case no trust results, except possibly to the extent of the cash payment by the alleged beneficiary.⁷⁴ So, too, a trust may result where the entire purchase price is paid from the proceeds of a bond and mortgage executed by the one in whose name title is taken where the circumstances show a loan of credit rather than an intention that the grantee acquire a beneficial interest in the property,⁷⁵ but as to this there is also authority to the contrary.⁷⁶ If, instead of lending money for the purchase, the grantee receives an absolute conveyance, the purchase money being his own, and there is an understanding that, when paid the price, he will convey the land to a third person, no resulting trust is created.⁷⁷ The status of the cestui que trust and the trustee under a trust resulting from a loan of part of the purchase money, where the lender took title in his own name, is not altered by subsequent advances made by the trustee.⁷⁸ In accordance with the general rule discussed supra § 101, that the statute of frauds is inapplicable to a resulting trust, the statute does not apply to the trust resulting in favor of the borrower where the conveyance is to the lender as security for the repayment of the loan,⁷⁹ and, as discussed infra § 133, parol evidence is admissible to establish a resulting trust from a loan or advancement of the purchase money and conveyance to the lender as security.

Where one takes title to property in his own name despite a parol unenforceable contract to acquire it for the joint benefit of himself and another, a resulting trust does not ordinarily arise in favor of the other where none of his means were used in making the purchase.

to a purchase for their joint benefit, and one of them takes title in himself alone, does not raise a resulting trust in the other's favor, where the parol agreement is unenforceable by reason of the statute of frauds and none of his means have been used in making the purchase,⁸⁰ and he has no contract rights in the property,⁸¹ and the one taking the title occupies no fiduciary relation to him,⁸² unless such other changes his position or takes some action that he would not have taken except in reliance on the agreement,⁸³ or unless the grantee enters into and carries out the agreement mala fide for the purpose of gaining an advantage to himself.⁸⁴ A resulting trust may arise even though the agreement for a joint purchase or to hold for joint benefit is oral and unenforceable where the failure to comply with the agreement involves the violation of a fiduciary duty, taking unfair advantage of a confidential relationship, fraud, unjust enrichment, or other inequitable conduct,⁸⁵ although in such case the trust is usually regarded as a constructive trust, as discussed infra § 142 et seq. Where there is a valid enforceable written or parol agreement for the joint purchase of property or a purchase for their joint benefit and title is taken in the name of one, a resulting trust arises in favor of the others to the extent of their interests under the contract,⁸⁶ although, in such case, the trust may be express rather than resulting.⁸⁷ Where, in pursuance of a written agreement to purchase lands and on their sale to divide the profits, property is purchased and title is taken in the name of a corporation, such property is held in trust by the corporation for the benefit of all the parties to the agreement;⁸⁸ but it has also been held that a written agreement whereby one was to purchase lands and, on the sale thereof, divide the profits with plaintiff does not charge the land purchased with any trust to secure plaintiff's share of the proceeds so as to enable him to compel an accounting by the person to whom the land was sold.⁸⁹ One does not hold in trust lands bought by him with his own money because of an oral agreement giving another the privilege of selling them and receiving half the proceeds in excess of a certain amount.⁹⁰

§ 109. Intention of Grantee to Hold for, or Convey to, Another

A trust results where property is conveyed to the grantee on the faith of his intention to hold it for, or convey it to, another, but a parol promise to convey to another, unenforceable because of the statute of frauds, will not raise a resulting trust.

Where property is acquired by a person under circumstances which show that it is conveyed to him on the faith of his intention to hold it for, or convey it to, another,⁹¹ or to hold it for, or convey it to, the grantor,⁹² or the grantor and another,⁹³ a resulting trust will be held to arise in favor of the person for whose benefit the property was intended. On the other hand, such a trust cannot be held to arise where the facts of the transaction are such that no intention to hold for, or convey to another appears, or can be shown;⁹⁴ nor can an unexpressed intention existing in a purchaser's mind to buy and hold land for another, where there is no fraud or breach of confidence, alone create a resulting trust.⁹⁵ A resulting trust arises where the grantee takes the property under an agreement to hold it for another,⁹⁶ particularly where, on the faith of such an intention, he is enabled to gain an advantage in the purchase of the property,⁹⁷ or where the consideration or a part thereof has been furnished by or for such other.⁹⁸ A resulting trust does not arise where there is no agreement or understanding with, or on behalf of, such other that the property is to be acquired for his benefit,⁹⁹ and no advance is made by or for him of any part of the purchase money,¹ or there is no fraud as against him.²

Agreement to convey. Where the grantee takes the property under an agreement to convey to another on certain conditions, a trust results for the benefit of such other or his heirs, which equity will enforce, according to the agreement;³ but a resulting trust does not arise from a mere verbal agreement whereby one is to purchase land and thereafter sell it to another;⁴ nor, if one agrees to purchase land and give another an interest in it, and he does purchase and pay his own money and take the title in himself, can such trust be established on the mere parol promise to hold it in trust for the other.⁵

Purchase at judicial sale. Where one buys land at a judicial sale under a parol agreement to purchase for another, who either furnished the money or had an actual interest in the estate or a bona fide claim thereto,⁶ or where the agent of creditors represents to the debtor that he will purchase the debtor's land at foreclosure sale under a certain mortgage, resell it for the benefit of the creditors, and turn over the balance to the debtor,⁷ a resulting trust arises. A parol agreement to purchase at a judicial sale and convey to another which is unenforceable as an express trust under the statute of frauds, as discussed supra § 34, does not give rise to a resulting trust where the one claiming a trust did not advance any part of the purchase money or have an interest or estate in the land or a claim thereto.⁸

§ 110. Conveyance in Consideration of Promise to Pay Debt of, or Support, Grantor

A conveyance on condition that the grantee pay the grantor's debts results in a trust in favor of the grantor; but no trust results from a conveyance in consideration of a promise to support.

Where a conveyance is made on the condition that the grantee pay certain debts of the grantor, there is a resulting trust in the grantor's favor,⁹ although no trust results in such a case to a creditor of the grantor, whose debt the grantee refuses to pay.¹⁰ Where an absolute and unconditional conveyance is made to secure a debt from the grantor to the grantee, a resulting trust arises,¹¹ and if the amount of the debt is tendered within a reasonable time after it becomes due, a reconveyance will be decreed,¹² or if the land is sold by the grantee for more than the debt assumpsit will lie against him for the surplus;¹³ but if the debt is not paid within a reasonable time, the grantee will hold the property discharged of the trust.¹⁴

Promise to support. Where property is conveyed by a deed absolute and unconditional in form, the fact that the grantee had promised, as a consideration for the conveyance, to support the grantor does not raise a resulting trust in the latter's favor,¹⁵ but the grantor has a right to live on the land and to burden it with an equitable lien if he is denied that right.¹⁶

§ 111. Improvement of Lands of Another

A trust does not result in favor of one paying for improvements on another's land.

Since, as discussed supra § 102 e, it is the rule that a resulting trust must arise, if at all, from the state of facts existing at the time the legal title to the property is acquired, such a trust cannot be created by a subsequent expenditure of money in improving the property;¹⁷ and the mere fact that one person's money is used in making improvements on another person's land does not give rise to a resulting trust in favor of the former on such land for the money so used.¹⁸

§ 112. Payment of Encumbrances on Land of Another

A resulting trust does not ordinarily arise in favor of one paying an encumbrance on another's land.

The mere fact that one person pays, or advances money to pay, encumbrances on land conveyed to another does not create a resulting trust therefor in his favor.¹⁹ Thus, in jurisdictions which hold that a mortgagor is not divested of his title to the land by a foreclosure sale prior to the expiration of the redemption period, the purchaser at foreclosure sale obtaining only a foreclosure judgment lien during the period of redemption, one who pays either all, or a portion of, the amount necessary to redeem land from a mortgage foreclosure does not acquire any equitable title thereto on the theory of a trust under the rule that if one person buys land with the money of another and takes title in his own name there is a resulting trust.²⁰ Where, however, a person under an agreement to hold the premises as security for his reimbursement and to release or reconvey them on being repaid, by way of a loan advances money for the mortgagor's benefit to redeem property from a mortgage foreclosure and takes title in himself, a resulting trust is created in such property in favor of the mortgagor;²¹ and, where a mortgagor is furnished the money to redeem land sold under a power in the mortgage, under his parol contract to convey the land to the persons furnishing the money, the mortgagor after such redemption holds the legal title in trust for such persons.²² Where one in a confidential relation with an owner of land and assuming to act for him pays off encumbrances on the land and takes a deed to himself, he holds the title thus acquired in

§ 113. Vendor as Trustee for Purchaser, or for Assignee of Purchase-Money Notes

A vendor of land holds the title as resulting trustee for one to whom he has assigned the purchase-money notes.

A vendor of land who retains the legal title, but assigns the purchase-money notes to another, holds the land as resulting trustee for the assignee;²⁴ and where a vendor of land who has executed a bond for the deed, conditioned to make title when the purchase money is paid, transfers the purchase-money note, equity will consider such transfer as transfer of the lien and regard the vendor as holding the legal title to the land in trust to secure payment of the debt.²⁵

a. In General

Where a fiduciary uses fiduciary funds to purchase property and takes title in his own name or the name of a third person, a resulting trust arises in favor of the persons entitled to the funds with which the purchase was made.

It is an established rule of equity that, where trust and confidence are reposed by one person in another, and the latter accepts the confidence or trust, equity will convert him into a trustee, whenever it is necessary to protect the interest of the person so confiding and do justice between them.²⁶ In accordance with this rule, if any trustee or other person occupying a fiduciary relationship uses the fiduciary funds or assets in the purchase of property and takes a conveyance in the name of himself or a third person, a resulting trust arises in such property in favor of the persons entitled to the funds or assets with which it is purchased,²⁷ particularly where the purchase is made for the benefit of such persons.²⁸ A resulting trust arises in the above cases by way of exception to a statutory provision, that, where the consideration is paid by one person and the conveyance made to another, no trust shall result to the former,²⁹ unless the conveyance is so taken with the knowledge and assent of the persons entitled to the funds used.³⁰ One given money to purchase property who takes the conveyance in his own name holds the title on a resulting trust;³¹ and, where one having funds of another uses them to acquire property, taking title in himself, he holds the property on a resulting trust for the owner of the funds.³² Where property is purchased with the time of transfer of title.—Meagher v Harrington, 254 P. 432, 78 Mont. 457.

Unauthorized sale

No resulting trust arises where one sells land of another without authority and purchases other land with the money so obtained; the sale, being unauthorized, does not affect the owner's title, and he has no interest in the consideration paid.—Arnold v Ellis, 48 S.W. 893, 20 Tex.Civ.App. 262.

funds of an estate and title taken in the name of the life tenant, a trust results in favor of the remaindermen.³³ Use by a husband of his wife's money together with his own, without objection, in a business venture does not operate to attach a trust in favor of the wife to realty purchased with the proceeds of the business.³⁴

Use of fund to pay for previous purchase. A resulting trust does not arise where the funds are applied by the fiduciary to payments due on property previously sold and conveyed to him on his own credit.³⁵

b. Funds in Hands of Agent

Where an agent uses the funds or assets of his principal to purchase property, taking title in his own name or that of a third person, the property is held on a resulting trust for the principal.

Where an agent, having funds or assets of his principal in his possession, uses them in the purchase of property, and the purchase is made or title taken in the name of himself or of a third person, a resulting trust in the property so acquired arises in favor of the principal or his heirs,³⁷ as against the agent or his heirs,³⁸ although the agent made no express promise to act as trustee,³⁹ and although the principal is indebted to the agent in an amount equal to the value of the property purchased.⁴⁰ In the absence of a statutory provision to the contrary such a trust will arise, although the transaction was so conducted with the principal's knowledge and consent;⁴¹ but, under a statutory provision that no trust shall result where the title to property is taken in the name of one person and the consideration is paid by another, if the title is taken in the agent's name with the principal's knowledge or assent, a trust does not result to the principal,⁴² except in favor of his creditors,⁴³ although it will if the agent takes the deed without the knowledge or consent of the principal.⁴⁴

Loans by principal. No resulting trust arises where the principal loans money to the agent to be used in paying for land previously purchased by him.⁴⁵

Purchase by agent with own funds. The general rule applies where the agent is given funds to purchase lands for his principal and he purchases for himself with his own funds,⁴⁶ even where the principal has paid nothing,⁴⁷ although, where the agent purchases with his own funds, it has been held that there must be an agreement in writing between the principal and his agent,⁴⁸ and that, as discussed infra § 133, parol evidence is not admissible to prove a resulting trust in favor of a principal in lands purchased by an agent and paid for with his own funds. Where an agent makes a valid purchase for himself,⁴⁹ or where he pays his own money for the land, not having any fund of the principal on hand, and not as a loan to the principal, a trust does not result notwithstanding the principal subsequently reimburses the agent for the amount expended.⁵⁰ If, however, an agent purchases prop-

Part payment by agent. Where funds of the agent are combined with funds of his principal in the purchase, a trust results to the principal in a proportionate part of the purchase;⁵² but a resulting trust does not arise in favor of an agent authorized to purchase property who pays part of the purchase money with his own funds,⁵³ such payment being a loan or advance to the principal.⁵⁴

2. PAYMENT OF CONSIDERATION FOR TITLE IN ANOTHER

§ 115. General Considerations

The general rule that a trust results in favor of one who pays the purchase price for a conveyance of property to another and the statutory modification of that rule are discussed infra § 116. The various elements necessary for the application of the rule are discussed infra § 117 et seq. Whether the purchase of property in the name of another is a fraudulent conveyance is considered in Fraudulent Conveyances § 38.

§ 116. — Existence of Resulting Trust in General

Whether or not a resulting trust arises in favor of the person furnishing the consideration for a transfer of property to another depends in the final analysis on the intention, at the time of the transfer, of the person furnishing the consideration; unless abolished or modified by statute, the general rule is that in the absence of a showing of a different intention or understanding, where property is paid for with the assets of one person and title to the property is taken in the name of a stranger, the property is held on a resulting trust in favor of the one furnishing the consideration for the transfer.

As a general rule, sometimes embodied in statute, property paid for with the money or assets of one person, title thereto being taken in the name of a stranger or person for whom he is under no legal or moral obligation to provide, is held by resulting trust, in favor of the person furnishing the consideration, or persons claiming under him, and the person thus obtaining title is a trustee for the person paying the consideration.⁵⁵ The trust which re-

If realty is purchased with partnership funds, person holding legal title will be regarded as holding it subject to a resulting trust in favor of firm furnishing the money.—Emsweller v. Emsweller, 61 N.E.2d 377, 390 Ill. 286.

Trust for another

A resulting trust cannot be converted into one for a person other than he who furnishes the purchase

suits under such circumstances does not arise from contract or agreement of the parties,⁵⁶ but from the facts and circumstances;⁵⁷ the trust results in such cases as a creature of equity⁵⁸ and arises by implication or operation of law.⁵⁹ However, the mere fact of payment of the purchase money by one other than the one in whose name title is taken is not always sufficient to raise a resulting trust.⁶⁰ Whether or not a resulting trust arises in favor of the person furnishing the consideration for a transfer of property to another depends in the final analysis on the intention, at the time of the transfer, of the person furnishing the consideration,⁶¹ and such intention is to be determined from all of the facts and circumstances.⁶²

An intention that the grantee is not to receive and hold the legal title as beneficial owner is an essential element to the creation of the resulting trust,⁶³ and a resulting trust arises in favor of the one furnishing the consideration for a transfer to another only in the absence of circumstances showing a different intention or understanding.⁶⁴ Thus, no resulting price.—Dickinson v. Dickinson, 40 A.2d 184, 181 Conn. 392.

Although defendant paid consideration for transfer of land to town, town did not have power to accept the realty as trustee or to hold a naked legal title to the realty for benefit of some particular individual, and constructive or resulting trust would not be recognized.—*Anglin v. Corporate reorganization

Where new corporation was set up primarily to discharge insolvent corporation's indebtedness, and new corporation assumed the insolvent corporation's debts and issued bonds, composed of classes A, B, and C, in return for debts assigned to it, there arose no resulting trust whereunder the stock held by new corporation's incorporators was held for the benefit of mechanics' lien creditors, who held class C bonds, after the class A and class B bonds had been discharged, in absence of any provision in the contract between the parties in interest indicating that class C bondholders were to be stockholders of the corporation.—*Belmont Iron Works v. trust arises where the one furnishing the consideration does not intend to obtain a beneficial interest in the property,⁶⁵ or where he intends that the one in whose name the property is taken shall have the beneficial interest,⁶⁶ even though the beneficial interest is contingent or conditional.⁶⁷

For this reason or because it is so provided by statute, the rule that a resulting trust arises where property is bought by one person with the money or assets of another, or where a person purchases land with his own money, and takes a conveyance thereof in the name of another, is frequently stated as a presumption.⁶⁸ The rule or presumption in favor of a resulting trust is based on the natural equity that he who pays for the property should enjoy it⁶⁹ and on an inference or presumption as to the intention of the one furnishing the consideration.⁷⁰ The rule or presumption in favor of a resulting trust is founded on the natural presumptions that he who supplies the purchase money or other consideration intends the purchase for his own benefit, rather than for the benefit of a stranger,⁷¹ and that the conveyance in the name of the other is a matter of convenience and arrangement for collateral purposes.⁷² This presumption of resulting trust is not one of law,⁷³ but is one of fact;⁷⁴ it is not conclusive⁷⁵ and may be rebutted.⁷⁶

The rule that a resulting trust arises in favor of the one supplying the consideration for the transfer of property to another applies although there is no fraud⁷⁷ or any fiduciary relationship between the one paying the purchase price and the one in whose name title is taken.⁷⁸ A resulting trust will arise in favor of a party paying the consideration, even where the conveyance is made to another with the knowledge and consent of the payor.⁷⁹ Where the title to the property is taken in the name of a third person without the knowledge or assent of the person paying the consideration, the resulting trust therein arises, as of course, in favor of the latter,⁸⁰ as where the purchase price is paid by one person, with the real intention that the title thereto shall be taken in his name, but by mistake or otherwise it is taken without his knowledge or consent in the name of a third person;⁸¹ and this is particularly true where the grantee so acquires the title through fraud.⁸² However, it is generally held that a resulting trust does not arise where the taking of title in the name of such stranger was tortious,⁸³ in which case a constructive trust arises, as discussed infra § 142 et seq.

Statutory abolition or modification of rule. Under some statutes, the common-law rule is abolished or modified,⁸⁴ and a resulting trust does not arise from

Ordinarily, where parties are not closely related and one party pays purchase price of property and has conveyance made to another, an inference arises, even in the absence of knowledge of the conveyance by grantee, that conveyance was in trust for payor, and a resulting trust may be established, even without proof of an agreement on part of grantee to hold or reconvey.—*Williams v. the mere fact that one supplied the consideration for the transfer of property to another.⁸⁵ However, even under such statutes a resulting trust arises in the case of fraud or mistake,⁸⁶ where the grantee has taken the deed, as an absolute conveyance, in his own name without the knowledge or consent of the person paying the purchase money,⁸⁷ or, in violation of some trust, has purchased the property conveyed with the money or property of another,⁸⁸ or where by agreement, and without any fraudulent intent, the grantee was to hold the land in trust for, or convey it to, the person paying the purchase price.⁸⁹

§ 117. — Property Subject to Trust

A resulting trust in favor of the one paying the consideration for the transfer of property to another may arise with respect to anything which a court of equity recognizes as a subject of property.

A resulting trust in favor of the one paying the consideration for a transfer of property to another may arise with respect to anything which a court of equity recognizes as a subject of property.⁹⁰ So the equitable rule of a resulting trust arising from the payment of the consideration applies to real property,⁹¹ and may be applied with equal force

grantee is to hold land in trust for the person paying the purchase money, a trust results in favor of the latter, refers to the grantor or to the person paying the purchase price, and not to the grantee or trustee.—Staab v. Staab, 145 P.2d 452, 158 Kan. 77.

Change from reality to personality

Where a resulting trust was imposed on a freehold and the interest involved subsequently became personal property, the resulting trust, once attached, cannot be divested without the beneficiary's consent, even though the interest is personal property, since a resulting trust may attach to personal property as effectively as it may be imposed on real property.—Sweezy v. Public policy

Treasury regulations pertaining to form of registration of United States savings bonds, prohibiting transfer and limiting amount in bonds which may be held, do not show a "public policy" against registering bonds in name of another, so as to warrant court in refusing to enforce a resulting trust in favor of daughter by reason of her purchase of bonds in name of mother on theory that enforcement would be against public policy.—Makinen v. George, supra.

§ 118. — Nature of Sale and Transfer or Conveyance

Within the rule that a resulting trust arises in favor of one paying for a conveyance to another, a "conveyance" includes any transfer of title, legal or equitable.

Within the rule that a resulting trust arises in favor of the one paying for a conveyance to another, a "conveyance" includes any transfer of title,⁷ legal or equitable,⁸ and embraces an executory contract for the sale of land,⁹ although as to this, there is also authority to the contrary.¹⁰ If the circumstances are sufficient for that purpose, a resulting trust will arise, although the property is purchased at a judicial,¹¹ tax,¹² mortgage foreclosure,¹³ or execution¹⁴ sale. Where the consideration for an exchange of property is furnished by one person and the title is taken in the name of another, a resulting trust arises.¹⁵ Where a vendee has the deed made to a third person who gives a bond to convey to the vendee, such acts give rise to a trust,¹⁶ and, where two persons jointly purchase land from an administrator, accepting his bond for title to be made to one of them only, the resulting trust arising in favor of the copurchaser is not affected by the fact that the bond for title did not bind the estate, being only the administrator's individual bond.¹⁷ A trust will result to one who advances the purchase money, whether the legal estate is taken in the names of the purchaser and others jointly,¹⁸ or in the names of others without that of the purchaser,¹⁹ or whether in one name or several,²⁰ or whether jointly or successively.²¹

- b. Source of consideration

a. Nature of Consideration

Under the rule that a resulting trust arises in favor of one paying the consideration for a transfer of property to another, the consideration need not be money, but may be anything of value.

In order to make applicable the rule that a resulting trust arises in favor of one paying the consideration for a transfer of property to another, it is not necessary that the consideration which moves from the cestui que trust should be money,²² provided it is something of market²³ value.²⁴ It may be lands,²⁵ goods,²⁶ materials,²⁷ money,²⁸ parting with an inchoate interest in land,²⁹ a bond or mort-

No interest conveyed by contract

Where contract for purchase of realty granted no definite interest in land to vendee but only granted right to purchase land by paying a certain sum of money at fixed periods, proof that money paid under contract by vendee was obtained from a third person and that vendor was aware thereof did not establish a resulting trust under contract in favor of third person, so as to require vendor to account to third person for money paid under contract before contract could be cancelled as a cloud on title.—Rosenthal v. gage, or other securities,³⁰ credit,³¹ the performance of professional³² or other³³ services, or care and support.³⁴ It may be the release of an obligation,³⁵ such as a release from a liability which the trustee owes the cestui que trust,³⁶ release of a share in the proceeds of a sale of property,³⁷ or the payment of an indebtedness of the grantor to another,³⁸ or it may be a promise.³⁹ Natural love and affection alone are an insufficient consideration to establish the resulting trust.⁴⁰ The mere indorsement of a promissory note in order to enable another to borrow money to purchase property is not sufficient to create a resulting trust.⁴¹ The satisfaction of a fictitious debt is not sufficient consideration to support a resulting trust.⁴²

b. Source of Consideration

subject to a resulting trust in his favor must have been the owner of the consideration given for the conveyance.

In order that the rule that a resulting trust arises in favor of one supplying the consideration for a conveyance to another may apply, it is essential that the person who claims the benefit of the trust should have title to, or an interest in, the consideration used,⁴³ that is, such person must have furnished the consideration⁴⁴ or a part of it.⁴⁵ So the money or assets must belong to such person,⁴⁶ or by its payment by another he must incur an obligation to repay, so that the consideration actually moves from him.⁴⁷ However, the consideration may have been paid either by⁴⁸ or for⁴⁹ the person claiming the resulting trust. It is sufficient if it was furnished by another on his behalf⁵⁰ or on his credit.⁵¹ It has been held that the fact that the purchase price is paid from income derived from the

Implied promise to pay

In action to establish resulting trust, evidence that claimant made down payment on purchase price and subsequent installment payments thereon, and that transferee of realty agreed to hold title as a con-

property is not an obstacle to the creation of a resulting trust.⁵³

Where the proceeds of the sale of one's property are used to purchase other property, title being taken in the name of a stranger, a resulting trust may arise.⁵³ A resulting trust will not arise in favor of a person by or on behalf of whom no part of the consideration is furnished;⁵⁴ nor will a resulting trust arise where the alienee himself in effect pays the consideration.⁵⁵ Where a purchaser's down payment is used by the vendor to pay another for the same property, a resulting trust does not arise in favor of the purchaser.⁵⁶ The fact that the money which the stockholders paid into a corporation was used to purchase land in the name of the corporation does not result in a trust in favor of the stockholders.⁵⁷

§ 120. — Time of Payment

In order that a trust may result in favor of one supplying the consideration for a transfer of property to another, the consideration must be furnished or paid at or before the time title to the property passes, as a part of the original transaction of purchase.

In accordance with the general rule discussed supra § 120 c as to when a resulting trust is created, a trust resulting from the payment of the consideration by one for a conveyance to another must arise, if at all, from the state of facts existing at the time the legal title to the property is acquired,⁵⁹ and cannot arise from matters coming into existence afterwards,⁶⁰ and the person claiming the benefit of the trust must then occupy such position as will entitle him to be substituted for the grantee.⁶¹ Hence, in order to create a resulting trust in favor of one, by or on behalf of whom the consideration is paid or furnished for the purchase of property which is purchased in the name of another, the consideration must be furnished or paid at or before the time the title to the property passes, as a part of the original transaction of purchase,⁶² or an absolute

A resulting trust may be declared in favor of one who paid nothing at or before the conveyance provided he at that time became obligated to pay the purchase price.⁶⁴ A payment subsequent to the transfer of title will not support a resulting trust⁶⁵ unless it is made in pursuance and as a part of the original transaction of purchase,⁶⁶ as where he secures it at that time to be thereafter paid,⁶⁷ although it is not sufficient that the money is paid after the purchase to a third person, in payment of securities given by such person at the time of the purchase.⁶⁸

Installment payments

(1) When the purchase price consists of a cash payment and others which are payable in deferred installments, the right to resulting trust depends on the payment of that which was immediately payable, and an obligation to meet those which are deferred as they mature.—Upchurch v. Goodroe, 6 So.2d 869, 242 Ala. 395.

(2) Where initial payment was made at time deed was passed to another by person claiming benefit of implied resulting trust pursuant to intent that person claiming the trust should pay the purchase price, initial payment would support establishment of trust, and subsequent payments, made in accordance with original intention, would establish that portion of the claim.—Estes v. Estes, 55 S.E.2d 217, 205 Ga. 814—Price v. Price, 54 S.E.2d 578, 205 Ga. 623—Williams v. Porter, 42 S.E.2d 475, 202 Ga. 113—Loggins v. Daves, 40 S.E.2d 520, 201 Ga. 628.

(3) The intent at the time the conveyance was made that one claiming benefit of implied resulting trust should pay purchase money may be established by proof of an initial payment by one claiming benefit of the trust, at or before time title is conveyed to another, and in such a case, in absence of satisfactory proof to contrary, it may be presumed that the one making such initial payment would complete the payments to protect his equitable title.—Loggins v. Daves, 40 S.E.2d 520, 201 Ga. 628.

Va.—Brecher v. Wilson, 6 S.E. 209, 34 Va. 813, 10 Am.S.R. 883.

In the absence of an agreement by the cestui que trust to pay a note for part of the purchase price, given by the person in whom legal title vested, payment by the cestui que trust subsequent to the vesting of title will not raise a resulting trust in his favor for the fractional part of the property thus paid for,⁶⁹ although an agreement to pay the note will raise such trust.⁷⁰ The assumption, after the purchase, of an obligation to pay for the property will not create a resulting trust.⁷¹ Events subsequent to the purchase of the property and the transfer of the title may be considered in determining if a resulting trust was raised where they throw light on the intention with which the purchase was made.⁷² Thus, the fact that the payor manages the property, collects rents, pays taxes and insurance, pays for repairs and improvements, or otherwise asserts ownership, and the acquiescence by the transferee in such assertion of ownership show that a resulting trust rather than a gift was intended;⁷³ whereas if the grantee exercises dominion over the property and the payor does not attempt to do so, it indicates that the purchase was made with the intention of conferring the beneficial interest in the property on the grantee.⁷⁴

§ 121. — Mode and Sufficiency of Payment

One claiming a resulting trust in property conveyed to another must furnish the consideration, whether it is money, assets, or an obligation to pay, as part of the original transaction of purchase.

Payments for family purposes

Where parties were living together as a family and money paid by the one was for family purposes, no sum could be allocated specifically to contract so as to create a resulting trust in his favor, even though there may have been some sort of agreement between the parties.—Hille v. It is essential to the creation of the resulting trust that the money or assets furnished by or for the person claiming the benefit of the trust should enter into the purchase price of the property.⁷⁵ Payments or outlays which are not the purchase price or the consideration for the transfer of the property will not support a resulting trust.⁷⁶ So, where a portion of the purchase money was given to the grantee at various times before the purchase of the land without reference to the purchase, no resulting trust arises.⁷⁷ This does not mean, however, that such person should actually count out and pay down the money to the vendor;⁷⁸ it is sufficient if the money or its equivalent is furnished to the person who pays the purchase money,⁷⁹ or if there is an absolute obligation to pay, incurred by the person claiming the benefit of the trust,⁸⁰ or by some other person on his behalf,⁸¹ as a part of the original transaction of purchase. A trust will not result to one who merely guarantees the obligation.⁸²

§ 122. — Part Payment

In the absence of a statute modifying the common-law rule, a trust results pro tanto in favor of one paying part of the consideration for the transfer of property to another unless he manifests an intention that a resulting trust should not arise, or that a resulting trust to that extent should not arise.

As a general rule, where a conveyance is made in the name of one person and a part of the consideration is paid by another, a trust results in the latter's favor pro tanto,⁸³ particularly where there is an agreement or undertaking that he shall have a corresponding interest in the property,⁸⁴ unless he manifests an intention that no resulting trust should arise,⁸⁵ or that a resulting trust to that extent should not arise.⁸⁶ It has been held that one paying part of the purchase price may in no event secure a greater interest in the property by way of a resulting trust than the proportion that the amount paid by him bears to the whole purchase price,⁸⁷ but if he agreed to take a lesser interest or share, a trust will result only for such lesser interest or share.⁸⁸ While payment of the entire purchase price by one person, title being taken in the name of another, may give rise to a resulting trust as to the entire property,⁸⁹ a resulting trust will not arise in favor of a person in the whole property purchased unless the entire purchase money has been furnished by or for him.⁹⁰ Where the contributor pays an ali-

quot part of the purchase price, it is assumed that it was intended that he have a corresponding interest in the property and a trust will result to that extent, even though there is no other evidence as to the intention of the parties as to the extent of the interest he should receive.⁹¹ Where one claiming a resulting trust in property conveyed to another made the initial payment at the time the property was conveyed, but did not make all the subsequent payments, it has been held that the resulting trust should be limited to the proportionate part of the purchase price that he paid.⁹²

It is usually held that a mere general contribution toward the purchase is not sufficient to support a resulting trust,⁹³ and that the contribution must be a definite part of the whole consideration⁹⁴ or for some definite interest,⁹⁵ or determinate aliquot

Governant to support

Where mother, for purpose of better securing her indebtedness to her daughters, deeded two parcels of realty, which had previously been mortgaged to daughters as security, to daughters, fact that deeds were also based on further consideration that daughters would provide mother with support, care, and nursing for rest of her life, prevented a trust in the realty from arising in favor share or part of the estate.⁹⁶ Thus, a resulting trust will not be declared where it is not possible to establish the proportion of the purchase price contributed by the one claiming a resulting trust.⁹⁷ It has been held that the contribution must be an aliquot part of the full purchase price.⁹⁸ On the other hand, it has been held that where it is agreed that the contributor is to have an interest proportional to the amount of his contribution, a trust will result for such interest even though the amount contributed is not an aliquot part of the purchase price,⁹⁹ and that a contributor is entitled to a resulting trust proportionate to his contribution to the purchase price even though his contribution was not an aliquot part of the purchase price, and there was no understanding or agreement as to the extent of the interest he was to have in the property.¹

one of them only,² or of a third person for their benefit,³ a resulting trust, as a general rule, will arise in favor of the parties not named in the conveyance, in proportion to the amount of the consideration they have respectively contributed.⁴ In the absence of proof to the contrary, in such cases, the law presumes that the different parties contributed equally.⁵ Where the property is purchased by two or more under an agreement that each shall have a specific interest therein, a trust results to a party not named in the conveyance to the extent of such specific interest,⁶ although the amount contributed is a different proportion of the whole purchase price,⁷ and the person taking title is trustee as to the other's interest.⁸ It has been held that where, without fraud or mistake, property is conveyed to the purchasers as joint tenants, and each has contributed to the purchase price, a resulting trust will not arise although their contributions were unequal.⁹

Statutory modification or abolition of common-law rule. Under statutes modifying or abolishing the common-law rule that a resulting trust arises in favor of one paying the consideration for a transfer of property to another, as discussed supra § 116, a resulting trust will not arise from the mere fact that one pays part of the consideration for the transfer of property to another.¹⁰ However, a resulting trust may arise where the grantee takes the deed, as an absolute conveyance, in his own name without the knowledge or consent of the person furnishing part of the consideration,¹¹ or where by agreement, and without any fraudulent intent, the grantee was to hold the land in trust for, or convey it to, the party paying the purchase price.¹²

§ 123. — Purpose of Payment in General

a. In general

b. Acquisition of interest in property

a. In General

It is generally held that a trust will not result or be enforced in favor of one who pays the consideration for a transfer of the property to another for a fraudulent or illegal purpose, but this rule is sometimes not applied where the injury to the public interest from the nature of the transaction does not outweigh the undesirability of the grantee's unjust enrichment.

It is generally held that a trust will not result or will not be enforced in favor of one who pays the purchase money and has the title taken in the name of a third person for a fraudulent or illegal purpose,¹³ as where the transaction is in fraud of an existing statute and in evasion of its express provisions.¹⁴ Thus, as discussed in Fraudulent Conveyances § 271, one taking title to the property in another's name for the purpose of defrauding his creditors may not enforce a resulting trust, although, as discussed in Fraudulent Conveyances § 38, the creditors of the one paying the consideration may subject the property to their claims. Where the law prohibits anyone other than the licensee from having a pecuniary interest in a liquor license, the court will not impose a resulting trust with respect to a liquor license in favor of the one who paid for the license.¹⁵ However, it has been held that whether or not the one furnishing the consideration for a conveyance to another for a fraudulent or illegal purpose should be allowed to enforce a resulting trust depends on whether the public interest in preventing the particular type of wrongdoing is sufficiently great to outweigh the undesirability of the grantee's unjust enrichment.¹⁶ Moreover, it has been held that a fraudulent intent contrary to the Plaintiff who advanced part of purchase price of farm conveyed to defendants, although not entitled to enforce a resulting trust or lien against the land, could recover the money advanced.—Howser v. Johnson, 179 S. W.2d 897, 297 Ky. 213.

Rule applied with caution

The "illegal purpose rule" which applies to prevent the recovery of property under a resulting trust when property is taken in name of another for an illegal purpose or for a purpose against public policy and good morals should be applied with caution because of the frequent unjust enrichment of one who is also a party to the claimed illegal transaction when rule is applied.—Makinen v. George, 142 P.2d 910, 19 Wash.2d 340.

Forest regulations

Where husband purchased land and sheep, borrowing money from bank for purchase price, but took title in wife's name in order to evade regulations of United States Forest Service as to number of sheep that could be grazed on land, husband, and bank as successor to husband's rights were not entitled to assert equitable interest in land on ground of purchase money advanced as against wife's children, since resulting trust will not arise out of acts against public policy and bank was not innocent purchaser.—Olsen v. Bank of Ephraim, 68 P.2d 195, 93 Utah 364, rehearing denied 73 P.2d 78, 93 Utah 379.

Government license

Where Japanese government sought permission to establish fund in American branch of Japanese bank and gave formal assurance to United States that it was exercising official governmental control over every transaction involved, and Secretary of Treasury granted such license, bankrupt Japanese corporation was not entitled to balance of such fund on theory of resulting trust, even though it supplied consideration for establishment of such fund.—Carr v. Yokohama Specie Bank Limited, of San Francisco, C.A.Cal., 200 F.2d 251.

16. Mont.—Thompson v. Steinkamp, 187 P.2d 1018, 120 Mont. 475.

Factors to be considered

The factors to be considered in determining whether a resulting trust should be enforced where title is taken in another's name for a fraudulent or illegal purpose are whether the conduct of the one who paid the consideration involved serious moral turpitude; the extent of the policy of the law making the transaction illegal; whether the enforcement of the resulting trust would tend to prevent the accomplishment of the illegal purpose; whether the grantee was more at fault than the party paying the consideration; and whether the party paying the consideration was ignorant of the law or facts making the transaction illegal.

Transfer made to put property beyond reach of wife

implication of a purchase-money resulting trust will not rebut or defeat the trust.¹⁷

A resulting trust may arise in favor of the one supplying the consideration where title is placed in the grantee's name as a matter of business convenience,¹⁸ to increase the grantee's credit standing,¹⁹ or to enable the grantee to become surety on bonds.²⁰ Where legal title to corporate stock is taken in the name of one person merely to comply with the requirements of the law with respect to the formation of the corporation and it is the intention of the parties that the beneficial interest in the stock shall be in another, who furnished the consideration therefor, a resulting trust arises.²¹ Where property is purchased by one person in behalf of another who furnished the consideration, title being taken in the name of the former for the sole and only purpose of relieving such person from embarrassment of litigation with a person claiming as a common-law wife of a relative, the statutory provision that, when a conveyance for a valuable consideration is made to one person, and the consideration therefor is paid by another, and by agreement, without any fraudulent intent, the grantee is to hold the land in trust for the party paying the consideration, applies, and a trust will be deemed to result.²²

b. Acquisition of Interest in Property

nished by one person and the title is taken in the name of another, a resulting trust may arise for the benefit of the person furnishing the consideration only where he provides the consideration for the purpose of having the property or an interest therein acquired in his name or for his benefit.

If property is purchased with consideration furnished by one person and the title is taken in the name of another, a resulting trust may arise for the benefit of the person furnishing the consideration where,²³ and only where,²⁴ he provides the consideration for the purpose of having the property or an interest therein acquired in his name or for his benefit, and a trust will not result in his favor if he advances the money as a gift, or advancement, as discussed infra § 124, or with the view of supplying him with the means of perfecting his own title.²⁵ So, also, where a part of the consideration for the purchase is furnished by one person, a resulting trust will arise only where he supplied the consideration for the purpose of having an interest in the property.²⁶ Where there are joint contributors to the purchase of property for a specific purpose, and title is taken in the name of one only, if the project is abandoned by the other, a resulting trust does not arise in favor of such other, but his relief is by reimbursement.²⁷

Loan. The rule is well settled that, where property is purchased with borrowed money and title is taken in the name of the borrower, no resulting trust arises in favor of the lender,²⁸ even though the

(2) Holding that resulting trust arose on defendant's purchase of property with money given her by plaintiff's decedent, though property was placed in defendant's name for purpose of preventing decedent's former wife from attempting to enforce claim of back alimony against property, was not abuse of discretion, where defendant had sufficient knowledge of decedent's purpose to constitute her a party to the illegal purpose, and decedent's widow would be deprived of her dower interest and her right of inheritance if the resulting trust was not enforced, and where it appeared that no creditor had been defrauded.—*Thompson v. money is loaned under a parol agreement that the borrower's interest in the property shall rest in the lender to the extent of his loan,²⁹ or on an agreement that the title should be held for the benefit of the lender as security for the loan,³⁰ or on an agreement to share in the profits.³¹ This rule also applies in the case of money lent for the purpose of making a part payment.³² The fact that the money is lent on the faith of the property of another does not give the latter such ownership of the money as to entitle him to claim the trust for his benefit.³³

Since, as stated supra § 102 e, a resulting trust arises, if at all, the instant title passes on the facts then existing, money furnished to make payments on lands theretofore acquired under a contract cannot create a resulting trust in favor of the one lending the money.³⁴ As discussed supra § 107, where title is taken in the name of the lender, a trust results in favor of the borrower.

§ 124. — Payment as Gift or Advancement

A resulting trust does not arise in favor of one paying the purchase price for a conveyance of property to another by way of advancement³⁵ or gift³⁶ to another, but a trust results, if at all, in favor of the person in whose behalf the payment, as an advancement or gift, is made.³⁷ A statutory presumption of resulting trust does not apply where the conveyance is intended as a gift.³⁸ Where the owner of all of the stock of a corporation purchases property and takes title in the name of the corporation, the inference is that a gift was intended and no trust results.³⁹

§ 125. Relationship between Parties

As a general rule, where one purchases property with his funds and has the title conveyed to his wife, child, or other natural object of his bounty, or one for whom he is under a legal or moral obligation to provide, a resulting trust does not arise in favor of the one paying the purchase price unless he manifests an intention that the grantee shall not have the beneficial interest in the property.

As a general rule, where a person purchases property with his funds and has the title conveyed to his wife, as discussed infra § 127 a, his child, as considered infra § 129 b, or other natural object of his bounty, or one for whom he is under a legal or moral obligation to provide, a resulting trust does not arise in favor of the one paying the purchase price⁴⁰ unless he manifests an intention that the grantee shall not have the beneficial interest in the property.⁴¹ In such case, the presumption is that the transaction is intended as a gift,⁴² advancement,⁴³ or settlement⁴⁴ to the nominal purchaser, and not as a resulting trust.⁴⁵ Such presumption, however, is one of fact,⁴⁶ and not of law,⁴⁷ and may be rebutted by evidence or circumstances to the contrary.⁴⁸

A resulting trust arises where the grantee is a stranger, as discussed supra § 116, or one toward whom the purchaser has no legal or moral obligation of support,⁴⁹ but it has been held that the question is not to be determined by the closeness of the relationship, but whether the relationship was such as to make it probable that a gift was intended.⁵⁰ Where the parties are closely related by blood or marriage, their subsequent conduct and attitude toward the property, their financial situation, and their relationship in the conduct of common business enterprises and investment may all be looked to in determining their intent.⁵¹ Where a parent furnishes the consideration for the purchase of property as an advancement to a child, and has the title made to the child's husband, a resulting trust does not arise in favor of the parent,⁵² or the child;⁵³ but where the transaction is regarded as an advancement of money to the child, and the child's money is used to pay for the conveyance to her husband, the situation is one in which a wife's assets are used to buy property for her husband, as discussed generally infra § 127 b, and a trust results in favor of the child, particularly where title is taken in the husband's name without her knowledge or consent.⁵⁴ If money is lent to a son-in-law on that person's security and is used to purchase property, no trust arises in behalf of the lender's daughter.⁵⁵ The close, confidential relationship between a pastor, paying the consideration, and the church in whose name title was taken, has been held to rebut the presumption of a resulting trust.⁵⁶ Where the members of a family contributed to a fund for the purchase of property under an agreement that they were to share equally, and one member took title to the property, he holds the title on a resulting trust in favor of the other members of the family,⁵⁷ and each member of the family acquires an equal interest and not one in proportion to his contribution to the fund.⁵⁸

Under statutes modifying the common-law rule and providing that a trust does not result from the mere payment of the purchase price for a conveyance to another, as discussed generally supra § 116, a trust does not ordinarily result where one pays the consideration for a conveyance of property to a relative.⁵⁹

§ 126. — Husband and Wife in General

paying the consideration for a conveyance of property to his or her spouse is a question of the intention of the one paying the consideration at the time of the transfer.

A resulting trust may be established between husband and wife.⁶⁰ Whether a trust results in favor of one paying the consideration for a transfer of property to his or her spouse, or jointly, is purely a question of the intention of the one paying the consideration at the time of the transfer,⁶¹ in the determination of which, the rules as to when a transaction between husband and wife will be presumed a gift, as discussed infra §§ 127, 128, play a large part and the different rules applicable in the case of payment by the husband and payment by the wife rest on the fact that a husband is legally obligated to support his wife while a wife is not ordinarily obligated to support her husband.⁶² As is the case with purchase money resulting trusts generally, as discussed supra § 116, a purchase money resulting trust arising from a transaction involving a husband and wife is a creature of equity;⁶³ it arises by implication of law from the transaction⁶⁴ and is not created by contract.⁶⁵ A resulting trust in favor of a husband or wife paying the consideration for a transfer of property to his or her spouse arises, if at all, at the time of the transfer,⁶⁶ and cannot be created by subsequent events⁶⁷ such as

Fund insufficient to meet purchase price

Where one member of the family received various sums to effect the purchase for family of certain property and was not obligated by family agreement to supply the deficiency between purchase price and amount of contributions she had received, she could not claim property as her own merely because she or her husband did supply deficiency without asking other members of family to contribute and thereby effected the purchase.—Sines v. A statutory exception that a resulting trust may arise where the grantee takes the title as an absolute conveyance without the knowledge or consent of the person paying the consideration does not apply where an indenture deed recites the part payment by a father as advancement to his daughter, title being taken in the name of her husband, since the daughter's consent to title being taken in the name of her husband will be implied.—Dalzell v. § 127. — Payment by Husband or Wife with Title in the Other or Jointly

- a. Payment by husband with title in wife or jointly
- b. Payment by wife with title in husband or jointly

a. Payment by Husband with Title in Wife or Jointly

Where a husband pays the purchase price for a conveyance of property to his wife or to himself and his wife jointly, it is ordinarily presumed that he intended it as a gift to his wife and a trust will not result in his favor; but where it appears that he did not intend the wife to take a beneficial interest in the property, a resulting trust in his favor arises.

The general rule, discussed supra § 116 that in the absence of a showing of a different intention, a resulting trust arises in favor of one paying the purchase price for a conveyance of property to another does not apply where the conveyance is made to the wife of the one paying the purchase price for the property.⁷¹ Ordinarily it will be presumed, in the absence of circumstances showing a contrary intent, that the conveyance was intended as a gift,⁷² settlement,⁷³ or advancement⁷⁴ to the wife, and not

Statutory presumption

Where the presumption of gift, settlement, or advancement is rebutted, the statutory presumption in favor of a resulting trust applies.—Roberge v. Roberge, 180 N.W. 15, 46 N.D. 402—65 C.J. p 409 note 66.

an agreement that the wife shall hold the property in trust for the husband.⁸³ A resulting trust will also arise in favor of the husband where the title is taken in the wife's name without the husband's knowledge or consent.⁸⁴ No resulting trust arises where it is the intention that the wife receive a beneficial interest on a condition or contingency.⁸⁵ Where the husband paid for the conveyance to the wife with the expectation that he would be reimbursed, no trust results in his favor.⁸⁶

As a general rule, a purchase of property by a husband and a conveyance to husband and wife will not raise a resulting trust in favor of the husband,⁸⁷ the deed prima facie making a valid settlement on the wife to the extent of the interest conveyed to her thereby,⁸⁸ and the presumption being that a gift⁸⁹ or advancement⁹⁰ was intended; but the presumption is rebuttable⁹¹ and a resulting trust will arise where it appears from the facts and circumstances that the husband did not intend that the wife should have any beneficial interest in the property.⁹² If the husband intends that the deed shall be made to him, and without his knowledge it is made to him and his wife, his wife holds on a resulting trust for him.⁹³ Where the husband pays for a conveyance to himself and his wife intending that she shall have the property on his death, but shall not have any beneficial interest before then, there is no resulting trust in favor of the husband.⁹⁴

A purchase by a husband with a conveyance to a trustee on an express trust in favor of the wife necessarily eliminates a resulting trust in favor of the husband.⁹⁵ Where two persons jointly purchase property and cause the deed to be made to the wife of one of them, the purchasers are tenants in common, and the wife is their common trustee.⁹⁶

Conveyance through intermediary. Where a husband purchases real property in the name of a third person, the deed declaring the use to be for the grantee, and has such third person convey it to the purchaser's wife, no resulting trust will arise,⁹⁷ unless made with an understanding that it should be held in trust for him,⁹⁸ the transaction being a gift⁹⁹ or settlement.¹

Title in fiancée. Where property is purchased from consideration belonging to one person, and title is taken in the name of the person's fiancée, a resulting trust arises.² If the person furnishing the consideration is unable to marry by reason of not having secured his divorce, his intended wife is not within the rule that a gift to her is presumed,³ and a resulting trust will arise in favor of the actual purchaser.⁴ So, if property is purchased by one person, and the deed is made in the name of a person he intends to marry but with whom he has no valid contract to marry at the time, and such deed is not delivered to the grantee, a resulting trust

Void marriage. Where the marriage is void because one of the parties is of mixed blood within the prohibited degrees, and the man furnishes the consideration for a conveyance to the woman, intending that the conveyance is to be a gift, no resulting trust arises.⁶ Where a marriage is a nullity because the supposed husband was married at the time, and the supposed wife purchases property in her own name with money received from the supposed husband as gifts, she is entitled to the property.⁷ Where the wife secures a divorce without the knowledge of the husband, property bought for her in the belief that she is his wife is held on a resulting trust for him.⁸

Illegal or meretricious relationship. Where a man and woman live together as husband and wife, but know that they are not married, and the man pays for property which is conveyed to the woman, it has been held that there is no presumption of a gift and that a trust in favor of the man will result,⁹ but a trust will not result where it appears that he intended that the woman should have the beneficial interest in the property.¹⁰ On the other hand, it has been held that under such facts a gift is to be presumed and a trust in favor of the man does not result,¹¹ although a trust will result where it is shown that it was not intended that the woman receive the beneficial interest in the property.¹²

Statutes modifying common-law rule as to purchase money trusts. Under statutes providing that a resulting trust shall not arise from the mere fact that one pays the purchase price for a transfer to another, a trust does not result in favor of the husband where he pays for a conveyance to his wife¹³ or in their joint names,¹⁴ but the statutory exceptions thereto also apply,¹⁵ and a trust in favor of the husband results where, by agreement, the wife was to hold the property in trust for her husband.¹⁶

b. Payment by Wife with Title in Husband or Jointly

While there is substantial authority holding that where a wife pays the purchase price for property conveyed to her husband, a gift will be presumed, the general rule is that where the wife's assets are used to pay the purchase price for a conveyance to her husband or jointly, a resulting trust will presumably arise in favor of the wife.

There is substantial authority holding that where a wife pays the purchase price for a conveyance of property to her husband, a gift will be presumed.¹⁷ The presumption is rebuttable¹⁸ as where the wife did not know that the conveyance was taken in the husband's name,¹⁹ or it was agreed that the conveyance should be in the wife's name.²⁰ In the

Where man furnished consideration for realty title to which was taken in name of woman with whom he was living in illicit cohabitation and which was used by parties jointly as home, there was not, in absence of evidence showing that conveyance was for purpose of inducing or prolonging illicit cohabitation, illegality militating against enforcement of resulting trust in favor of purchaser which arose on finding of intent inconsistent with gift to woman.—Walberg v. absence of proof sufficient to rebut the presumption of a gift, no trust will result.²¹

to confer the beneficial interest in the property on the husband,²⁹ as where she intended it to be a gift to her husband.³⁰ Statutes providing that a trust shall be presumed to result where one pays the purchase price for a conveyance to another have been held to apply,³¹ and statutes sometimes expressly provide that if a married woman permits her husband to have the custody, control, and management of her separate property it will be presumed that he acts as her trustee under a resulting trust.³² fraudulent purpose.³³ Where the wife furnished no part of the consideration, she can obtain no trust therein.³⁴ Since a wife who lends money to her husband becomes a mere creditor of the husband, the fact that he invests the money in real estate, taking title in his own name, raises no trust in favor of the wife.³⁵ Likewise, a resulting trust will not arise in favor of the wife in property purchased in the name of her husband with her money or assets, where under the law at the time, such assets belong to her husband,³⁶ unless the circumstances show an intention on his part to hold in trust for her or her heirs.³⁷

Payment of the purchase money, with the wife's funds or property with conveyance to both husband and wife, ordinarily results in a resulting trust in her favor,³⁸ particularly where the conveyance to the husband and wife is made without the wife's knowledge or consent.³⁹ So, where property is purchased with the separate means of the wife and the deed is taken in the name of the wife without recital of the separate source of the consideration, the title is in the community but a resulting trust in favor of the wife is created.⁴⁰ If, contrary to her intention, the husband causes the title to be made to himself and wife without her consent, a resulting trust in her favor arises,⁴¹ and a trust results in favor of the wife where the husband is included as grantee by mistake and contrary to the wife's instructions.⁴² If the wife intentionally causes the property purchased with her funds to be taken in the name of herself and her husband as tenants by entireties, no resulting trust in her favor arises.⁴³

Statutory modification of common-law rule. Under statutes modifying the common-law rule and providing that no trust shall result from the mere payment of the purchase price for a transfer of property to another, as discussed supra § 116, a trust does not ordinarily result in favor of the wife where she pays the purchase price for a conveyance of property to her husband or to herself and her husband;⁴⁴ but a trust will result where the husband takes title without the wife's knowledge or consent,⁴⁵ or where the purchase is in violation of

Where mortgage foreclosure purchaser's grantee conveyed to a husband, who was his incompetent wife's committee, land which was owned by the wife prior to foreclosure, a trust was not imposed on the land in favor of the wife, because of the fact that the contract of sale to the husband provided that the husband was to pump oil on the land and apply the oil runs on purchase price, on ground that thereby the husband paid for the land with the wife's property which was the land itself.—*Bendean v. some trust.⁴⁶

Illegal or meretricious relation. Where a couple live together as man and wife without being lawfully married, and property purchased with the woman's money is in the man's name, they are strangers within the meaning of the rule that property paid for with the money or assets of one person, title thereto being taken in the name of a stranger or person for whom he is under no legal or moral obligation to provide, is held by resulting trust in favor of the person furnishing the consideration,⁴⁷ so that a trust results in favor of the woman.⁴⁸ If the man purchases the property by giving his note for the price, and later persuades the woman to pay the note, she thereby obtains no resulting trust.⁴⁹ Where a man and woman lived together illicitly, it has been held that a resulting trust in the property acquired by the man does not arise in favor of the woman.⁵⁰

§ 128. — Payment with Funds of Both Husband and Wife

Where both husband and wife contribute to the purchase price, and title is taken in the name of one or both, a trust may result so that each takes a beneficial interest in proportion to his or her contribution to the purchase price.

Where a portion of the consideration belongs to the husband and title is taken in the name of the wife, it will be presumed that the amount paid by the husband was by way of advancement⁵¹ or gift⁵² to the wife, and not as a resulting trust in favor of the husband,⁵³ and such trust does not arise.⁵⁴ Such presumption of advancement⁵⁵ or gift⁵⁶ may be rebutted in which case a trust will result in favor of the husband in accordance with the proportion of the purchase price he paid.⁵⁷ Where the proceeds of joint property are used to purchase property in the wife's name alone without the husband's knowledge or consent, a resulting trust arises in his favor as to a half interest in the property.⁵⁸ If the wife by law is constituted trustee for the husband, it is immaterial whether or not she purchased as trustee for the husband.⁵⁹ Where the consideration came from husband and wife jointly and the parties intended that the wife should take title for their joint use, no trust has been held to result.⁶⁰ Where the consideration is furnished by husband and wife, and the title is conveyed to a third person, a resulting trust arises to the husband and wife in proportion to the amounts contributed by them.⁶¹

In order to create a resulting trust in favor of a wife, it is not indispensable that the whole of the consideration should have been furnished by her,⁶² and where any portion of the consideration belongs to the wife, and title is taken in the husband's name alone, there is no presumption of an advancement⁶³ and a resulting trust arises in her favor⁶⁴ to the extent that consideration furnished by her is used,⁶⁵ particularly where it was so agreed at the time of the purchase,⁶⁶ or where title is taken by the husband without her consent.⁶⁷ It has been held that where a husband uses his own funds and some belonging to his wife for the purchase of property and takes the deed in their joint names a resulting trust pro tanto will be declared in favor of the wife⁶⁸ and those claiming under her,⁶⁹ but not in favor of the husband.⁷⁰

On the other hand, no trust has been held to result where joint funds are used to purchase property in joint tenancy.⁷¹ Where the property is purchased with the joint funds of husband and wife and they direct that the title be made so that the survivor will obtain all the property, if title is made to them as tenants by entirety, no resulting trust in favor of the wife or her heirs can arise.⁷²

In order that a trust may result in favor of the wife, it must be shown what part of the purchase money was paid by her.⁷³ In the absence of proof that part of the consideration belonged to the wife, payment by the husband, with title to himself, raises a presumption that the payment was for himself,⁷⁴ which presumption is rebuttable.⁷⁵ Where the wife made the down payment and the husband gave his own notes for deferred payments, and took title in his name, it has been held that a trust pro tanto results in favor of the wife.⁷⁶

Where the husband contracts to purchase property by installment payments but dies before completion of payment, and the wife's separate estate furnishes all the consideration paid up to the time of default, and a son then arranges to take title by paying the balance due under the contract, a resulting trust arises in favor of the wife.⁷⁷ If the husband, without objection, uses his wife's money jointly with his own in his business ventures, no trust in favor of his wife arises in realty purchased with the proceeds of the business.⁷⁸ A wife, who lends her husband money to make part payments on a purchase of land, has no claim to a resulting trust,⁷⁹ nor does a resulting trust arise in favor of the wife in property purchased by the husband on his own credit, although part of the purchase money is subsequently paid with money borrowed from, or belonging to, her.⁸⁰

There is authority to the effect that as in other cases of part payment, as discussed supra § 123, a trust will not result in favor of a spouse making a mere general contribution toward the purchase price,⁸¹ and that in order to be entitled to a partial resulting trust, the spouse must have paid an aliquot part of the purchase money for a definite or specific interest in the property.⁸² Where husband and wife contribute the consideration for the purchase of property, there is no presumption that they contributed equally.⁸³

Where the couple are not validly married, a resulting trust may be imposed with respect to property acquired through their joint efforts so as to give each a beneficial interest in accordance with his or her contribution.⁸⁴ If the purchase is made in the woman's name with the joint funds of a supposed husband and wife, the man intending to retain his interest, a pro tanto resulting trust will arise in favor of the man.⁸⁵ Similarly, if the purchase is made in the man's name with joint funds, a trust will also arise in favor of the woman to the extent that her property was used to make the purchase.⁸⁶

has taken the deed, as an absolute conveyance, in his own name without the knowledge or consent of the other spouse who paid part of the purchase money.⁸⁷

Earnings of minor

(1) Where the earnings of a minor become the property of a parent, the use of the earnings to acquire property in the parent's name does not raise a resulting trust in favor of the child.—Macchi v. La Rocca, 201 P. 143, 54 Cal.App. 98—65 C.J. p 421 note 21.

or loan⁹² to the parent is intended. Where a child pays the purchase money for a transfer to his parent, he is treated the same as if he were a stranger,⁹³ at least where no legal obligation rests on the child to support the parent,⁹⁴ and the presumption of a resulting trust is not rebutted by the counter presumption of an advancement from the relationship.⁹⁵ Where a person in loco parentis purchases property with consideration furnished by the children, a resulting trust arises pro tanto.⁹⁶

Payment with funds of both parent and child. Where the payment out of the child's funds is only a part of the whole consideration, and title is taken in the name of the parent, a resulting trust pro tanto arises in his favor,⁹⁷ provided, it has been held, that it is of some definite or aliquot part of the whole consideration,⁹⁸ except where the parties intended that the purchase be solely for the benefit of the parent.⁹⁹

Statutory modification of common-law rule. Under the statutes, discussed generally supra § 116, which modify the common-law rule and provide that a trust shall not result from the mere fact that one pays the purchase money for a conveyance of property to another, a trust does not ordinarily result in favor of a child who pays the consideration for a transfer of property to his parent.¹ The exceptions to the statutory prohibition apply where a conveyance is made to the parent of the person furnishing the consideration, so that a trust results where the parent has taken the deed, as an absolute conveyance, in his own name without the knowledge or consent of the child who paid the consideration,² or where by agreement, and without any fraudulent intent, the parent was to hold the land in trust for, or convey it to, the child who paid the purchase price.³

b. Conveyance to Child of Person Paying Consideration

In the absence of circumstances showing an intention to the contrary, the payment of the purchase price by a parent for a conveyance of property to his child will be presumed a gift and a resulting trust will not arise in favor of the parent.

The rules with respect to a resulting trust in favor of the person paying the purchase money for property conveyed to a stranger by reason of presumption of law do not apply where a parent purchases property with his own funds or assets and the conveyance is made in the name of his child.⁴ Therefore, in the absence of circumstances showing an intention to the contrary, a purchase by a parent in name of the child will be presumed to be an advancement,⁵ settlement,⁶ or gift,⁷ and not a resulting

Fact that parents moved onto and resided on farm, price of which was partly paid with son's money, for long period of time and paid taxes did not prevent creation of resulting trust pro tanto in favor of son, where parents' possession and payment of taxes were reasonably attributable to their habit of managing son's business affairs during his absence from state—Clark v. In California

(1) Ordinarily, where a parent pays for a conveyance to his child, there is a presumption that a gift was intended and there is no presumption of a resulting trust, and no presumption that the minor takes the land for the benefit of his parent.—Oyama v. State of Cal., Cal., 68 S.Ct.

(2) However, it has been held that in view of Civ.Code § 853, providing that when a transfer of real property is made to one person and the consideration therefor is paid by another a trust is presumed to result in his favor, the presumption of a resulting trust is indulged even when a transaction is between parent and child—Harper v. Heizer, 229 P.2d 828, 103 Cal.App.2d 388—65 C.J. p. 420 note 17.

(3) On the other hand, it has been held that the statutory provision is subject to an exception in the case of parent and child and that the presumption is that a gift or advancement was intended—Quinn v. Reilly, 215 P. 1091, 198 Cal. 465—65 C.J. p. 420 note 17.

(4) Where husband and wife purchased property and went into possession, but record title was placed in name of purchasers' daughter and her husband, the daughter and her husband held the legal title to the property in trust for the purchasers—Rafferty v. Kirkpatrick, 85 P.2d 147, 29 Cal.App.2d 503.

Intention not to give beneficial interest until death

Where lower court found on sufficient evidence that father by taking conveyance of property, acquired by father with own money and work, in name of himself and daughter as joint tenants, intended to impart possession to daughter only on his death, presumption of a gift inter vivos to daughter was not rebutted to extent of depriving her of all beneficial interest in premises and daughter should be decreed to hold title subject to resulting trust in father of all beneficial interests, except that beneficial interest to whatever remained at father's death belonged to daughter—Shelley v. Landry, 79 A.2d 626, 97 N.H. 27.

Deed to child as trustee

Where mother purchased land and took deed therefor in name of her son as trustee, presumption of advancement to son as to land purchased was rebutted, and, where nothing was said in conveyance as to purpose of trust, trust was one in which son held title for exclusive benefit of mother furnishing consideration—*Ohio State Life Ins. name the purchase is made, the purchase will be presumed to be a gift,¹⁵ advancement,¹⁶ or settlement,¹⁷ and not a resulting trust;¹⁸ and no resulting trust arises,¹⁹ although the presumption is rebuttable.²⁰

Payment with funds of both parent and child. Where the consideration is furnished by both parent and child, and the title is taken in the name of the child, the presumption is that an advancement was intended,²¹ which presumption is rebuttable,²² and a pro tanto trust will result in favor of the parent where it appears that it was intended that the parent should have a beneficial interest.²³ Where the parents advance only a part of the purchase money for the purpose, and with the intention of securing the entire title to the property, and such title is taken by a son also contributing to the purchase, a resulting trust to the entire property does not thereby arise in their favor.²⁴ Under a statutory provision that resulting trusts may arise from the payment of the purchase money or from other circumstances, a resulting trust may arise in favor of a parent joining with the child in purchasing property, title to which is in the child's name.²⁵

Statutory modification of common-law rule. Under the statutes, discussed generally supra § 116, which modify the common-law rule and provide that a trust shall not result from the mere fact that one pays the purchase money for a conveyance of property to another, a trust does not ordinarily result in favor of a parent who pays the consideration for a transfer of property to his child.²⁶ However, the exceptions to the statutory prohibition apply where a conveyance is made to the child of the person furnishing the consideration, as where the child has taken the deed, as an absolute conveyance, in his own name without the knowledge or consent of the parent who paid the consideration,²⁷ or where by agreement and without fraud, the child was to hold the property in trust for the parent.²⁸

§ 130. — Children by Common Parent or Parents

Since persons in the relationships of brothers,²⁹ or brother and sister,³⁰ are generally under no legal or moral obligation to support each other, such brothers,³¹ or brother and sister,³² are strangers within the meaning of the general rule that where property is paid for with the money or assets of a person, and the title thereto is taken in the name of a stranger or person for whom he is under no legal or moral obligation to provide, a resulting trust in the property arises by operation of law in favor of the person furnishing the consideration, or persons claiming under him. It follows that the general rule that he who supplies the consideration is presumed to intend the purchase for his own benefit, rather than for the benefit of a stranger applies,³³ and a resulting trust arises³⁴ by implication or presumption of law,³⁵ although rebuttable,³⁶ and there is no presumption of advancement or gift.³⁷ Under the rule that no resulting trust exists in favor of one who pays the purchase money by way of a loan to another, and the conveyance is taken in the name of the borrower, discussed supra § 124, one who lends money to a brother who takes the conveyance does not become entitled to a resulting trust.³⁸ Where property is jointly purchased by brothers and sister, but the deed does not include one or more of them, such person or persons are entitled to a resulting trust to the extent of his contribution to the consideration.³⁹ A statutory prohibition of purchase money resulting trusts, discussed generally supra § 116, applies where the parties are children of a common parent or common parents.⁴⁰ So, also, the statutory exceptions to such prohibition apply, as that the prohibition shall not extend to cases where the alienee shall have taken an absolute conveyance in his own name without the consent of the person with whose money the consideration is paid.⁴¹

The general rules of evidence applicable in civil actions have been applied in actions with respect to resulting trusts.

The general rules of evidence applicable in civil actions have been applied in actions with respect to resulting trusts,⁴² and particular applications with respect to presumptions and burden of proof and admissibility, weight, and sufficiency of evidence are discussed infra §§ 132-137.

a. In general

b. Purchase-money resulting trusts

a. In General

The burden of establishing a resulting trust is on the party who asserts it.

The burden of establishing a resulting trust, as against the holder of the legal title, is on the party who asserts it.⁴³ Accordingly, the holder of the legal title to property is presumed to own the full beneficial interest,⁴⁴ and where a resulting trust is sought to be engrafted on a conveyance absolute in terms there is a presumption that the conveyance speaks the whole truth.⁴⁵ One claiming a resulting trust in property he conveyed without consideration has the burden of proving that he did not intend a gift.⁴⁶ A presumption of a resulting trust has the effect of prima facie establishing such trust.⁴⁷

As a general rule, the law will not presume a resulting trust except in a case of necessity.⁴⁸ Nevertheless, as discussed supra § 115 et seq, a trust will be presumed to result in favor of the one paying the consideration for a transfer of property to another. Other factual situations where a trust results or is presumed to result are discussed supra § 102 et seq.

Acquisition of property with fiduciary funds. In an action to declare a resulting trust in lands on the ground that the purchase was made with trust funds, the burden of proof to establish that such trust funds were used in paying for such land is on the one claiming a trust;⁴⁹ but, where the payment of such funds is shown, it becomes the duty of the fiduciary to establish facts showing that no trust was created.⁵⁰

b. Purchase-Money Resulting Trusts

The burden is on one claiming a purchase-money resulting trust to prove that the purchase was made with his assets, and on the one receiving the legal title to prove that it was intended that he receive the beneficial interest in the property.

In case of a resulting trust arising from payment of the purchase money by one person and transfer of title to another, as discussed supra § 115 et seq, the burden of proof, in the first instance, is on the party claiming the trust to prove that the purchase was made with money or assets furnished by, or belonging to, him,⁵¹ that the money went for the purchase of the particular property on which it is sought to impress the trust,⁵² and, if it has been only a part payment, to prove that he paid⁵³ or incurred an absolute obligation to pay⁵⁴ some specific sum for some distinct interest in, or aliquot part of, the premises purchased,⁵⁵ as well as the total consideration,⁵⁶ and the fact that the payment or agreement to pay was made before or contemporaneously with the purchase,⁵⁷ and as part of the original transaction of purchase.⁵⁸ Where, however, it is shown that the purchase money has been furnished by one party and the deed has been made to another, the burden is on the one holding the legal title to show that it was intended he should have some beneficial interest in the property.⁵⁹ Where the presumption of a resulting trust arising from the payment of the purchase price is rebutted, the burden is on the one claiming a resulting trust to establish it.⁶⁰ Under a statute providing that, subject to certain exceptions, no resulting trust shall result in favor of one furnishing the consideration for a conveyance to another, as discussed generally supra § 116, a person seeking to have a resulting trust established must bring himself within one of the exceptions.⁶¹ Under a statute providing that every trust shall be presumed fraudulent as against the creditors of the person paying the consideration therefor, the absence of fraudulent intent must be made affirmatively to appear.⁶²

Where gift presumed. Where the purchase is made for one for whom the payor is under a legal or moral obligation to provide, a resulting trust is not presumed, as discussed supra § 125, and the burden of establishing such trust is on the one claiming it.⁶³

Payment by husband and title in wife. Where the husband pays the consideration and title is taken in the name of his wife, the burden of overcoming the presumption of a gift or advancement is on the husband or the person claiming under him.⁶⁴ Where, however, it is claimed that the husband is estopped to assert a trust, the burden of proving such estoppel is on the party asserting it.⁶⁵

Payment by parent and title in child. Where a parent pays the consideration for a transfer to his child, the burden of overcoming the presumption of a gift or advancement is on the parent or the person claiming under him.⁶⁶

Payment by wife and title in husband. Where it is alleged that the wife furnished the purchase money, and the title was taken in the name of the husband, or of husband and wife, the burden of proof is on the party seeking to establish a resulting trust in such a case to show that the property was purchased with the wife's funds.⁶⁷ In those jurisdictions where a payment by the wife and a transfer of title to the husband raise no presumption of a gift or advancement to him, as discussed supra § 127, it is not necessary to show anything in addition to the facts of payment by the wife and transfer to the husband in order to establish a resulting trust.⁶⁸ Accordingly, it is not necessary to prove that it was the intention of the parties at the time of the transaction to create a trust;⁶⁹ and the burden is on the husband or persons claiming under him to show that no trust was intended.⁷⁰ In jurisdictions where it is held that payment by the wife and transfer of title to the husband raise a presumption of gift, as discussed supra § 127, it is held that the burden is on the wife to negative the presumption.⁷¹

Evidence, including parol evidence, which is competent, material, and relevant, is admissible to establish a resulting trust.

General rules relative to the competency, relevancy, and materiality of evidence in civil cases govern the admissibility of evidence on questions with respect to the establishment and enforcement of a resulting trust; and, accordingly, any competent and material evidence is admissible which is relevant to a matter in issue;⁷² and, conversely, evidence which is incompetent, immaterial, or irrelevant is not admissible.⁷³ In view of the rule discussed supra § 101 that resulting trusts are not within the prohibitions of the statute of frauds or statutes prohibiting parol trusts, parol evidence which is otherwise competent is admissible to prove a resulting trust,⁷⁴ even in opposition to a denial in the trustee's answer,⁷⁵ or even after the death of the grantee.⁷⁶ Parol evidence has also been held admissible to ingraft a resulting trust on a deed absolute on its face,⁷⁷ although it has been held that, in the absence of fraud or mistake, parol evidence is not admissible, as between the grantor and the grantee, to show a resulting trust in such a case.⁷⁸ Thus, parol evidence is admissible to prove a resulting trust arising from an agreement which constituted a part of the original transaction.⁷⁹

Parol evidence is admissible to prove a resulting trust from payment or ownership of the purchase money for a conveyance to another,⁸⁰ to prove payment or ownership of the purchase money,⁸¹ and to show that the consideration paid belonged to the person claiming the trust, even though the conveyance recites that the consideration was paid by the grantee.⁸² Parol evidence is also admissible to establish a resulting trust from a loan or advancement of the purchase money and a conveyance to the lender as security for its repayment,⁸³ or, although there is authority to the contrary,⁸⁴ to show a trust resulting from a purchase with fiduciary funds, such as the purchase by an agent with his principal's funds.⁸⁵ Where the circumstances are such that the law presumes a gift, as where a parent has paid for the conveyance of property to a child, or a husband has paid for property taken in the name of his wife, parol evidence is admissible to establish a resulting trust.⁸⁶ Parol evidence is likewise admissible to disprove a resulting trust,⁸⁷ or to rebut the presumption of a resulting trust arising from the payment of the purchase price for a transfer of property to another.⁸⁸ However, parol evidence is not admissible to establish a resulting trust in favor of one who has furnished no part of the purchase money,⁸⁹ to prove a parol contract to purchase for joint benefit where the alleged cestui que trust never furnished any portion of the purchase money,⁹⁰ to prove a resulting trust in favor of a principal in lands purchased by an agent with the agent's funds,⁹¹ to show a parol agreement giving to a resulting trust an effect or character different from that which the law would create from the acts of the parties,⁹² or to show a resulting trust in conflict with a writing between the parties showing an intent to the contrary.⁹³

Evidence has been held admissible to establish particular facts, such as the intention of the parties,⁹⁴ the trustee's knowledge of the cestui que trust's intention,⁹⁵ and his assent thereto,⁹⁶ the conveyance to the trustee,⁹⁷ the close relationship

The statute, declaring that when a transfer of real property is made to one person and consideration therefor is paid by or for another a trust is presumed to result in favor of the person by or for whom payment is made, creates a presumption only and comprehends resort to parol evidence.—Brinkley v. of the grantee to the purchaser;⁹⁸ the financial condition of the grantee;⁹⁹ the purchaser's moral obligation to support the grantee;¹ agreements of the parties;² the history of the transaction,³ such as negotiations leading up to the purchase of the property;⁴ the purpose of the transfer;⁵ and, to a limited extent, the understanding of the parties.⁶ These rules have been held applied where the claim is that the purchase was made by or for the benefit of several and the title taken in the name of one only,⁷ where the trust is sought to be established on the ground that the purchase money was paid by or for one person and the title taken in the name of another,⁸ and also where the property purchased was paid for with fiduciary funds.⁹

Admissions and declarations. As a general rule, parol evidence of the admissions and declarations of the parties relative to a resulting trust are admissible for the purpose of establishing such trust.¹⁰ Thus, it is competent to prove by oral declarations of the purchaser, made before or at the time of the transaction, his intention and purpose in taking the title in the name of another person,¹¹ and so, also, the admissions and declarations of the person in whose name property is purchased, made while the title remains in him, are admissible for the purpose of establishing a resulting trust in such property in favor of another,¹² such as his admissions that the property was purchased, or that he holds it, for the benefit of another,¹³ or that the purchase money was paid by such other.¹⁴

The antecedent and contemporaneous admissions and declarations of the parties may be received to rebut the presumption of a resulting trust,¹⁵ but subsequent declarations are only material, as they bear on the intention of the parties at the time of the purchase.¹⁶ An admission by the alleged beneficiary subsequent to the transfer of title is admissible to disprove a resulting trust.¹⁷

Evidence to rebut presumption. In accordance with the rule in civil cases generally, a party to a suit to establish a resulting trust may introduce evidence to rebut that of his adversary.¹⁸ The presumption of a resulting trust may always be rebutted or defeated by counter evidence, written or verbal, direct or circumstantial.¹⁹ Thus, the presumption of a resulting trust in favor of one furnishing the consideration for a purchase of land, the title to which is taken in the name of another, may be rebutted by evidence showing that the parties intended otherwise,²⁰ as by proof that the conveyance was intended as a gift or advancement to the grantee,²¹ or that the person paying the purchase money did so as agent, and not on his own account,²² or that transfer of title to the other,³⁶ from payment of the purchase price as a loan or advance for another and transfer of title to the lender as security,³⁷ or from the payment of fiduciary funds for a transfer made either to the fiduciary or to a third person.³⁸ The presumption of a resulting trust arising from payment of the purchase price for the transfer of property to another is evidence to be weighed with all of the other facts in the case in determining the existence of a trust.³⁹ In order to be sufficient to establish a resulting trust, the proof must be of facts

antecedent to, or contemporaneous with, the conveyance and not of facts following that time.⁴⁰

There have also been adjudications as to the sufficiency of the evidence, in particular cases, to establish a resulting trust where the payment of the purchase money was made by a husband and the title was taken in the name of his wife,⁴¹ where payment of the purchase price was made with a wife's property and title was taken in her husband's name,⁴² where a parent paid the purchase price for property transferred to a child,⁴³ or where the payment of the purchase money is made by a child and title is taken in the name of a parent.⁴⁴ While evidence that the placing of the title to the property in the wife or child as a gift would have the effect of stripping the husband or father of all his property and leaving him penniless at an advanced age may tend strongly to establish a resulting trust,⁴⁵ it is not conclusive.⁴⁶ So, the mere possession and improvement of the property, as well as the payment of taxes by the husband or father, are not conclusive as to his being the beneficial owner.⁴⁷

Fact of payment of, or ownership of, purchase money. There have been numerous adjudications as to the weight and sufficiency of the evidence, in particular cases, to establish the payment or ownership of the money or assets with which the property in which the trust is claimed was purchased by the person claiming the benefit of the trust,⁴⁸ as wheth-

was for some distinct interest or for specific proportion of the whole property.⁵⁶

Time of payment. Further, there have been adjudications as to the sufficiency of the evidence to show that the payment was made at the time of purchase or prior thereto.⁵⁷

§ 136. — Admissions and Declarations

Admissions and declarations offered to prove a resulting trust are received with great caution and are generally insufficient to establish a resulting trust unless they are plain and consistent, and are corroborated by other evidence.

Admissions and declarations offered to prove a resulting trust are received with great caution,⁵⁸ particularly after the death of the alleged trustee.⁵⁹ Such evidence is most unsatisfactory because of the facility with which it may be fabricated,⁶⁰ the impossibility of contradiction,⁶¹ and the consequences which the slightest mistake or failure of memory may produce.⁶² As a general rule, evidence of mere verbal admissions or declarations of the alleged trustee⁶³ or of the alleged cestui que trust⁶⁴ are insufficient to establish a resulting trust. This is especially true where the statements are ambiguous,⁶⁵ vague, conflicting, or inconsistent,⁶⁶ or consist of mere casual or indefinite expressions or admissions by the alleged trustee,⁶⁷ uncorroborated by other evidence,⁶⁸ such as that the property belonged to another,⁶⁹ or that he was purchasing or holding for another,⁷⁰ or that another is interested in the property,⁷¹ particularly after the death of such purchaser or a long lapse of time,⁷² or where such declarations were made many years before the trial.⁷³

Proof of declarations or admissions of the person in whose name title to the property was taken may, under certain circumstances, be entitled to special consideration,⁷⁴ and may be sufficient to establish a resulting trust if plain and consistent,⁷⁵ especially if they are corroborated by evidence of other circumstances,⁷⁶ as where a statement that a purchase is made for another is corroborated by proof that the purchase money was paid by such other,⁷⁷ or by proof of a prior agreement so to purchase,⁷⁸ but these declarations must be direct and certain,⁷⁹ plain and consistent,⁸⁰ and must be proved by evidence of the clearest, most satisfactory, and convincing character.⁸¹

Mere parol proof of an agreement to purchase or hold the property for another is insufficient to establish a resulting trust in favor of such other,⁸² unless it is corroborated by other evidence.⁸³ Declarations of the grantee to the effect that he holds the title for another, or has agreed to convey to another, have been held to be entitled to less weight than declarations to the effect that another person's mon-

§ 137. — Degree of Proof Required

Although there is some authority holding that a resulting trust may be established by a preponderance of the evidence, the general rule is that a superior measure of proof is required.

The general rule as to the character of the evidence necessary to establish a resulting trust, although expressed in varying phraseology, is in effect that a superior measure of proof is required,⁸⁷ and that a resulting trust must be established by an extraordinary degree of proof,⁸⁸ particularly where parol evidence alone is relied on,⁸⁹ where the alleged trustee has died,⁹⁰ where it is sought to establish the resulting trust after a lapse of many years,⁹¹ or where the death of witnesses and the loss of evidence render it practically impossible to make a defense.⁹²

While there is some authority holding that a resulting trust may be established by a preponderance of the evidence⁹³ and that the evidence need not be such as to remove all reasonable doubt,⁹⁴ it is generally held that a mere preponderance of the evidence is insufficient to establish a resulting trust.⁹⁵ It has been held that in establishing a resulting trust there must be the same strict rules of proof which are required for the establishment of fraud,⁹⁶ and it has even been considered that a resulting trust requires practically the degree of proof essential in criminal prosecutions.⁹⁷ Accordingly, it has been held that, in order to be sufficient, the evidence must establish a resulting trust beyond doubt,⁹⁸ beyond all doubt,⁹⁹ beyond substantial doubt,¹ or beyond reasonable doubt.² The evidence, it has been held, must be such as to lead to but one conclusion³ and the evidence is insufficient if it is susceptible of reasonable explanation on a theory other than the existence of a resulting trust.⁴

In order to establish a resulting trust, as against the holder of the legal title to property, all the essential facts and circumstances must be clearly shown,⁵ and the evidence must establish certainly and definitely the terms of the trust⁶ and, although it has been held that it need not be uncontradicted or undisputed⁷ or free from contradictions,⁸ it must be of such a character as to disclose the exact rights and relations of the parties⁹ and leave no essential element to conjecture or presumption,¹⁰ or to remote and uncertain inference;¹¹ and where the evidence is uncertain,¹² vague,¹³ indefinite,¹⁴

In order to establish a resulting trust, the evidence must be so clear, cogent, and convincing as to leave no reasonable doubt of the existence of facts which, of themselves, would imply a trust by operation of law—Roberts v. Roberts, Mo., 291 S.W. 485.

doubtful,¹⁵ conflicting,¹⁶ or unsatisfactory,¹⁷ or consists of mere conclusions,¹⁸ or is based solely on rumor,¹⁹ no trust will be held to be established.

A resulting trust must be established by evidence of the most convincing character,²⁰ of the most conclusive character,²¹ or of the most satisfactory character;²² by evidence which is most convincing and irrefragable;²³ most satisfactory and convincing;²⁴ of great clearness and certainty;²⁵ unequivocal,²⁶ unmistakable,²⁷ unquestionable,²⁸ or well-nigh conclusive;²⁹ or which is actually or practically overwhelming.³⁰

It has been variously stated that the proof, in order to be sufficient to establish a resulting trust, must be certain, definite, and reliable;³¹ certain, definite, reliable, and convincing;³² clear and certain;³³ clear and concise;³⁴ clear and conclusive;³⁵ clear and convincing.³⁶ Other phraseology employed
